A special five-man subcommittee of the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1965 launched a major investigation of the Ku Klux Klan, marking the first time the Committee had publicly investigated "un-American" activities which did not concern the suspicion of Communist subversion. The Subcommittee was headed by Committee Chairman Edwin E. Willis (D La.) and included Reps. Joe R. Pool (D Texas), Charles L. Weltner (D Ga.), John M. Ashbrook (R Ohio) and John H. Buchanan Jr. (R Ala.).

Although proponents of the investigation had predicted it would uncover evidence of "shocking crimes," the 1965 hearings, which began Oct. 19 following a six-month preliminary investigation and recessed Nov. 9, were mainly preoccupied with questions of bookkeeping practices and alleged petty crimes. For the most part, Klan officials subpenaed to testify declined to break their Klan oath of secrecy, invoking their 5th Amendment protection against self-incrimination. Most of them also refused to turn over Klan documents requested in the subpenas.

Hearings were resumed early in 1966, and on Feb. 2 seven Klan officers who had appeared before the Subcommittee in 1965 were cited by the House for contempt for failing to produce subpenaed Klan documents and records. (Details of 1966 action will be carried in the 1966 Almanac.)

The Klan investigation constituted the bulk of the Un-American Activities Committee's work in 1965, but during the year the Committee also undertook two lesser probes -- one into the structure of the Communist Party in Illinois and another into life in Communist Cuba.

During 1965, Congress twice voted funds to support the Committee's work, first for its general investigative activities and later specifically for the Klan investigation. On both occasions, controversies arose on the House floor over the Committee's activities, but the funds were approved by large majorities. (See p. 1519, 1521)

The outgrowth of the Klan investigation, which reportedly was to be concluded with a committee report in mid-1966, was expected to be a recommendation for new federal laws governing Klan-like activities. Although President Johnson had suggested the need for such laws early in 1965, the Justice Department awaited completion of the committee investigation before submitting draft legislation to Congress.

What form the new laws would take was not made clear in 1965. On a Sept. 9 CBS television program, "Inside the Ku Klux Klan," Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach suggested two possibilities: (1) to require Klan members to register with the Federal Government in much the same manner as Communist Party members were currently required to register, and (2) to expand federal jurisdiction over Klan-like activities. The latter course would permit prosecution of applicable cases, including certain murders, in federal courts. Katzenbach said that other remedies were also under consideration and that Administration recommendations would be made following windup of the Congressional investigation.

Background of Klan Probe

The investigation was prompted by evidence that the Klan, with its long history of violent acts, had begun to flourish again in the South after a 35-year decline. The rise in Klan membership in the years since World War II resulted largely from the failure of more respectable groups to halt efforts to speed desegregation -- federal efforts, such as the Supreme Court's 1944 decision outlawing the South's white primaries and its 1954 school desegregation decision, plus enactment by Congress of a series of laws, culminating in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965; and Negro efforts, featuring sit-ins, marches and other demonstrations of protest against segregation. The Klan, as well as other elements, viewed enforcement of Negro rights as a clear threat to white supremacy which, if not halted by legal means, should be ended in the only other way possible -- through threats or violence. Often these anti-integration acts were upheld, or at least condoned, in local circles including both law enforcement agencies and courts.

The Klan's activities were sharply attacked by President Johnson March 26 in announcing that four members had been arrested in connection with the March 25 slaying of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo, a civil rights worker. "She was murdered by the enemies of justice who for decades have used the rope and the gun and the tar and the feathers to terrorize their neighbors," he said. He pledged to "continue to fight them because I know their loyalty is not to the United States of America but instead to a hooded society of bigots." He directed the Justice Department to draft anti-Klan legislation for submission to Congress and suggested that Congressional committees might undertake an investigation of the Klan.

Four days later, on March 30, the Un-American Activities Committee announced it would conduct a full investigation of the Klan. This represented a new departure for the Committee. In the past its probes had dealt chiefly with left-wing subversive groups, particularly the Communist Party, and had met with opposition from numerous civil liberties groups which had termed them "witch hunts" that exposed purely for exposure's sake, often damaging the innocent along with the guilty. The Klan investigation also came under fire for the same reason and for others. Some critics felt the Judiciary Committee should conduct the probe with a view toward producing meaningful legislation, noting that Un-American Activities -- for all its investigations -- had rarely produced measures to curb the practices it had exposed. Others suggested that it would become all too evident to the Klan, no matter who conducted the investigation, that any new laws proposed would be difficult to pass and next to impossible to enforce, particularly in the South. Still others, including most of the civil rights groups, feared that the probe would spread to include investigations of the activities of groups fighting for integration. Some suggested that the massive publicity resulting from the Un-American Activities investigation could lead to an increase in Klan membership throughout the country or, barring that, could force the Klan to move underground into deeper secrecy.

The record of previous Congressional investigations -- one in 1871 and one in 1921 -- yielded little hope that the Committee's investigation alone would suppress the Klan. Six years after the 1871 inquiry the Klan was disbanded, but this was probably due more to other factors -- including achievement of its mission -- than to the exposure of its activities by Congress. And after the 1921 investigation, Klan membership surged to unprecedented numbers across the country so that by 1924 it had become a political power.

History of Klan

The original Ku Klux Klan organization was established in December 1865 at Pulaski, Tenn., by six young Confederate veterans whose sole purpose was to form a social club. Like many present-day fraternal orders, the Klan was intended as a secret society but not a sinister one. For the amusement of the members, and to enhance its mystery, the Klan adopted grotesque costumes, incantations, handclasps, burlesque titles for officers and a somewhat meaningless ritual. The club adopted the Greek name Kuklos, meaning circle, which later evolved to Ku Klux.

To publicize the new society shortly after its founding, members disguised themselves and their horses in sheets and pillow cases and paraded through town after dark. To their surprise, they discovered that many of the Negro onlookers were terrified by the sheeted "ghosts." It was reported afterwards that some of the newly freed Negroes were so frightened that they had "with haste gone back to their former masters, only too willing to work."

Gradually the Klan came to realize that it possessed a powerful means of restoring white supremacy to the South. In the Reconstruction period following the Civil War, elections and the judiciary were controlled largely by carpetbag politicians and federal troops sent to enforce Acts of Congress giving the Negroes equal political and civil rights. Thousands of Southerners were disfranchised. Unable to make their influence felt at the polls, it was easy for Southern whites to justify the use of strong illegal and extra-legal measures to partly restore prewar social and political conditions.

Groups of robed Klansmen began to pay midnight visits to the homes of recalcitrant Negroes. At first there was no violence; Klansmen merely relied on threats and the natural fear of the superstitious Negroes. Thousands of disfranchised white Southerners began to join the Klan. Local defensive groups, styled after the Klan, sprang up throughout the South in an effort to offset the influence on the Negro of the Freedmen's Bureau, the Union League and the Loyal League. It was estimated that in 1868 a majority of white men in the South belonged to one or another of the Klan-like organizations, and at least one of the groups, the Knights of the White Camelia, had more members and covered a wider territory than did the Klan.

The first general convention of the Klan was held in secret in May 1867, at Nashville, Tenn. A well-known Confederate hero, Gen. Nathan B. Forrest, was chosen to head the Klan and a constitution was adopted. Though fairly innocuous in 1867, this constitution was amended in 1868 to require that a candidate for admission to the Klan be "opposed to the principles and policy of the Radical party, and to the Loyal League, and the Grand Army of the Republic,...opposed to equality, both social and political, (and) in favor of a white man's government." In addition, it required that a member "believe in the inalienable right of self-preservation of the people against the exercise of arbitrary and unlicensed power."

As resentment against Reconstruction rose, and as Klan membership increased, more and more acts of violence such as whippings and tar-and-feather parties were associated with the Klan. Severe anti-Klan laws passed by the carpetbag state governments and by the Federal Government (based on the 14th and 15th Amendments) failed to suppress the Klan effectively. (Between 1866 and 1875, Congress enacted five major civil rights and Reconstruction laws, but by 1910 these Acts had been so modified by further statutes or so narrowly construed -- or declared unconstitutional -- by the Supreme Court that they had very little effect.)

By 1871, Northern public opinion was sufficiently outraged by tales of Klan violence to bring pressure on Congress to investigate Klan activities. In 1871, a 21-member group -- the Joint Select Committee to Inquire into the Condition of Affairs in the Late Insurrectionary States -- traveled through the South taking extensive testimony. Following its investigation, the Committee issued a 13-volume report including transcripts of most of the testimony as well as majority and minority views of its findings. Basically, the majority of 13 Republicans declared that the Klan constituted a criminal conspiracy against the laws of the land and against Negroes. The minority of eight Democrats viewed the Klan merely as a vigilance committee that was a natural outgrowth of misgovernment and exploitation of the South by Radical Republicans.

In September 1877, Gen. Forrest ordered disbandment of the Klan, suggesting that it had been "perverted" in some communities. By then, however, its mission of overthrowing carpetbag rule and restoring white supremacy had been accomplished, for the most part.

FIRST REVIVAL

The first revival of the Klan in 1915 was attributed largely to the success of the movie, "Birth of a Nation," which glorified the Klan and emphasized the hardships of Reconstruction. On Thanksgiving Day, 1915, William J. Simmons and 14 followers climbed Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, and founded the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which Simmons claimed to be a reincarnation of the old Klan. The constitution, titles and regalia of the earlier Klan were carried over intact into the new organization, but the initiation ceremony included at least one innovation: the burning of a cross.

The revived Klan, at first mainly a fraternal and patriotic order, struggled along with few members and very little income until June 7, 1920, when Simmons sought to improve the financial situation and signed a contract with two publicity agents, Edward Young Clarke and Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler. The publicists, who received a large part of the initiation fees in return for their services, expanded the Klan from a Southern to a national organization. Picturing the Klan as a defender of "true Americanism" and morality, they transformed it into an organization catering to every imaginable American prejudice. A "hate campaign" was launched not only against Negroes, but also against Jews, Catholics, aliens and radicals, and a variety of "evils" such as bootlegging, repeal of prohibition, sex, birth control, internationalism, and working on the Sabbath. Much of the success of the publicity campaign was due to the "Red Scare" of 1919-21 which had made the country fearful of radical foreign ideologies; a new flood of immigration after World War I; and a general stirring of latent hostilities toward racial, religious and ethnic minority groups. Membership increased tremendously in the South and -- more important -- spread to nearly all parts of the country. Fiery crosses were burned in many parts of the North.

Again, alarm over Klan activities brought pressure for a Congressional investigation, but little was done. Much of the alarm was generated or reinforced by a series of sensational articles in the New York World and a score of other newspapers, charging that the Klan was responsible -- directly or indirectly -- for a long list of killings, floggings and kidnapings. Four resolutions calling for an investigation of the Klan were introduced in the House in September and October 1921. The Rules Committee held hearings on the proposals, at which Simmons testified for several days that violence associated with the Klan was actually the work of others masquerading as Klan members. The Rules Committee failed to provide a rule for House floor consideration of any of the resolutions, and the matter was dropped by Congress.

Instead of receding in the face of widespread publicity, the Klan gained membership, growing to a strength estimated in 1925 at somewhere between 2 million and 6 million members. In 1922, under new leadership, the Klan placed all its officials on salary and used its money to influence the outcome of the 1924 elections. A number of Klan periodicals were distributed nationally.

During the 1924 election campaign the Klan reached the peak of its political power. As many as 300 delegates to the Democratic national convention in Madison Square Garden were thought to be Klan members, and a resolution to denounce the Klan by name in the Democratic platform was defeated by a margin of only one vote.

In the November 1924 elections, the Klan was credited with putting in office at least three governors (all Republicans) and six Senators. It reportedly held extensive political power in Colorado, Indiana, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas and West Virginia and to a lesser extent in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

The Klan shrank rapidly, however, in the late 1920s. The nationwide decline was attributed chiefly to a lessening of postwar tensions and to subsidence of the fear of Bolshevism and of Papal influence. In addition, the Klan lost influence in specific areas for other reasons. For instance, the top Klan leader in Indiana was sentenced to life imprisonment for murder. By 1940, total membership was estimated at 300,000, of which all but 30 percent was in the South. The revived Klan was formally disbanded April 23, 1944.

THE MODERN KLAN

The flourishing of the Klan after World War II was due in large part to the failure of more respectable groups like the White Citizens Councils to halt the advance of desegregation. Its renaissance was stimulated by federal actions which threatened white supremacy.

In 1944 the Supreme Court voided the South's white primaries, and in 1946 the Klan was called to action by an Atlanta obstetrician, Dr. Samuel Green. With Green's death in 1949 the Klan split into several groups, and it remained splintered. The growth of the various groups was given a new impetus from the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision, but it was enactment -- or expectation of enactment -- of the Civil Rights Act in 1964 that produced the largest postwar increase in Klan membership.

Total membership was estimated at the beginning of 1965 at about 10,000, and, with isolated exceptions, Klan membership was entirely in the South. The largest group was believed to be the United Klans of America Inc., with 5,000 members. It was headed by Robert M. Shelton, Jr., with headquarters in Tuscaloosa, Ala. Other groups reported to have 500 or more members were the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of Mississippi, the Original Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in Louisiana and the United Florida Ku Klux Klan. Actual Klan membership was supplemented by women's auxiliaries and a large number of "active sympathizers" who were not actually dues-paying members. In addition, Klans or Klan-like organizations masqueraded as hunting and fishing clubs, country improvement associations and gun clubs.

Klan members were implicated in most of the violent anti-Negro activities in the South in the early 1960s -- a series of bombings in Birmingham in 1963, the murders of three civil rights workers in Mississippi in 1964, the highway murder of Washington, D.C., educator Lemuel A. Penn in Georgia in 1964, and the 1965 slaying of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo near Selma, Ala.

Committee Funds

The Un-American Activities Committee in 1965 received two separate authorizations to support its investigative functions during the year. The first, voted in February, authorized funds for general Committee expenses, including preliminary inquiries into the activities of the Black Muslims, the Minutemen, the American Nazi Party and the Klan, which had been requested by several House Members. The second, voted in April following a nationwide television plea by President Johnson for tighter federal controls over Klan and similar activities, authorized funds for a full-scale investigation of the Klan.

GENERAL EXPENSES

The House Feb. 25, by a 360-29 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 188) authorizing $370,000 for general expenses of the Committee during 1965. Prior to final action, the House rejected on a 58-333 roll call a motion by Don Edwards (D Calif.) to recommit the resolution to the House Administration Committee with instructions that it hold open hearings on the justification for the funds request. The House Administration Committee had reported H Res 188 (H Rept 109) Feb. 25. The vote breakdown on final passage: R 125-0; ND 140-29; SD 95-0. The breakdown on recommittal: R 1-126; ND 56-113; SD 1-94. (For voting, see chart p. 940)

H Res 188 was one of a group of resolutions adopted by the House Feb. 24 and 25 providing investigation and study funds for committees in 1965. All other resolutions were adopted by voice vote. The resolutions provided a total of $3,755,250 for the expenses of the House committees, including Un-American Activities.

In 1961, when Un-American Activities Committee funds were subjected to floor attack, only six Members voted to cut the authorization (R 172-0; D 240-6). In 1963, 20 Members voted against providing funds for the Committee (R 169-0; D 217-20). However, there was no proposal in those years that was similar to the 1965 recommittal motion. (1961 Almanac p. 1015; 1963 Almanac p. 381)

During floor debate Feb. 25, Edwards urged support of his recommittal motion, stating that the Committee's "existence is patently unconstitutional in at least two respects -- its practice of investigating with no legislative purpose but exclusively for purposes of exposure, and secondly, its practice of holding legislative trials in violation of Section 9, Title I of the Constitution proscribing bills of attainder." (A long-time foe of the Committee, Edwards Jan. 5 had introduced a resolution (H Res 23) "to abolish" the Committee and to transfer its functions to the House Judiciary Committee. Similar resolutions had been introduced in the House Jan. 5 by Reps. Phillip Burton (D Calif.), Leonard Farbstein (D N.Y.), Augustus F. Hawkins (D Calif.), John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.), James Roosevelt (D Calif.) and Benjamin Rosenthal (D N.Y.), and Jan. 6 by Rep. Charles C. Diggs Jr. (D Mich.).)

On the two Feb. 25 roll calls, 29 of the 58 Members who voted for recommittal also voted against providing funds for the Committee. The other 29 who supported recommittal subsequently voted to provide the funds. One of the latter group, Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.), said he was in favor of the resolution to provide funds but that he would support recommittal "because I am tired of these unsubstantiated charges against the Committee ....Let us have hearings where witnesses can be heard and we can have cross-examination."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- March 10 -- Several House Democrats complained in floor speeches that recent Republican Congressional Campaign Committee news releases constituted a "smear attack." Freshman Rep. Teno Roncalio (D Wyo.) inserted in the Congressional Record the text of this GOP release sent to his home state: "The Republican Congressional Committee charged that Rep. Teno Roncalio (D Wyo.) tried to cripple the House Un-American Activities Committee by voting to withhold funds from the Committee pending public 'hearings' to 'justify' its budget request. Fortunately the Congressman's vote was not decisive because the vast majority of House Members realized the importance of having a committee of Congress with powers to investigate subversive activities....Unfortunately Congressman Roncalio's vote has lined him up with every subversive organization in the country which is trying to abolish the Committee."

Rep. John R. Schmidhauser (D Iowa), another freshman, also complained of being singled out in the Republican Committee's news release. He said the Committee was attempting to inject "an element of viciousness" into the political life of his district. House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.) warned the Republicans that "trying to convict by association" has not "paid off with the American voters."

PRESIDENT ASKS KLAN PROBE

President Johnson March 26 announced on nationwide television an all-out effort to "bring the activities of the Klan under effective control of the law"and suggested that "in connection with new legislation Congressional committees may wish to investigate the activities of such organizations and the part that they play in instigating violence...." The President made his statement in announcing the arrest and arraignment of four Klan members in connection with the March 25 slaying of a white civil rights worker near Montgomery, Ala.

The actions were triggered specifically by the ambush murder of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo of Detroit, who was killed while she drove Negro civil rights workers back to Selma, Ala., after a march to Montgomery which ended March 25. The President said that "Mrs. Liuzzo went to Alabama to serve the struggle for justice. She was murdered by the enemies of justice who for decades have used the rope and the gun and the tar and the feathers to terrorize their neighbors."

The four Klan members were arraigned and jailed March 26, and three of them were released on posting $50,000 bail that day. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, which arrested them, charged them with conspiring to violate the civil rights of Mrs. Liuzzo, in violation of an 1870 civil rights law.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- March 26 -- Asked to comment on the President's statement, Imperial Wizard of the United Klans of America Inc., Robert M. Shelton Jr. of Tuscaloosa, Ala., said, "He's a damn liar.... This organization has never used tar and feathers and a rope.... He's got the shoe on the other foot. From all indications of what the people of Alabama have been through in the last week, it is he that is using the gun and the rope -- his tanks and ammunition against the Southerner instead of the Klan against the Negro."

March 27 -- Shelton charged that the murders of Mrs. Liuzzo and Rev. James J. Reeb, a white minister who died March 11 from skull injuries inflicted by white men after he participated in a civil rights demonstration in Alabama March 9, were part of a "trumped up Communist plot to destroy the right wing in America."

The President's call for legislation to curb Klan activities was endorsed by 21 GOP House Members: Baldwin (Calif.), Bell (Calif.), Broomfield (Mich.), Cahill (N.J.), Cleveland (N.H.), Conte (Mass.), Curtis (Mo.), Dwyer (N.J.), Ellsworth (Kan.), Harvey (Mich.), Goodell (N.Y.), Horton (N.Y.), Keith (Mass.), Mathias (Md.), McDade (Pa.), Morse (Mass.), Quie (Minn.), Robison (N.Y.), Rumsfeld (Ill.), Stafford (Vt.) and Tupper (Maine).

Oct. 22 -- Klan member Collie Leroy Wilkins Jr., one of the four persons arrested March 26 in connection with the slaying of Mrs. Liuzzo, was acquitted of murder charges by an all-white jury in Hayneville, Ala. An earlier proceeding in the case was declared a mistrial May 7. On Oct. 20, the Alabama Supreme Court had rejected an appeal by Alabama Attorney General Richmond Flowers to bar 11 avowed white supremacists from the jury in the second Wilkins trial.

Oct. 27 -- Flowers said Wilkins' acquittal had given the influence of the Klan a "tremendous boost" but would bring new laws making the murder of a civil rights worker a federal crime to be tried in federal courts.

KLAN PROBE EXPENSES

The House April 14, by a 313-43 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 310) authorizing additional expenditures of $50,000 by the Un-American Activities Committee for its public investigation of the Klan. The vote breakdown: R 108-3; ND 127-35; SD 78-5. (For voting, see chart p. 952)

The additional funds were requested after the Committee March 30 voted unanimously to conduct the full Klan investigation suggested by President Johnson. The request was approved (H Rept 242) by the House Administration Committee April 14.

Among those opposing H Res 310 were several who rarely saw eye-to-eye on issues. Many of these were in accord only in opposition to the resolution; their reasons were widely divergent. The 35 Northern Democrats opposing passage included four Negroes: Conyers (Mich.), Diggs (Mich.), Hawkins (Calif.) and Powell (N.Y.). (The other two Negroes in the House did not vote.) The Southern Democrats in opposition were Gonzalez (Texas), Lennon (N.C.), O'Neal (Ga.), Smith (Va.) and Whitten (Miss.). The Republican opponents were two Southern freshmen -- Callaway (Ga.) and Walker (Miss.) -- and a Northerner -- Saylor (Pa.).

DEBATE -- April 14 -- Don Edwards (D Calif.) -- "We are not talking about an investigation of the Ku Klux Klan for purposes of punishing the...Klan" or publicizing the "beliefs and associations of private individuals. Such activities are clearly outside the authority of a Congressional committee." Instead, "we are talking about a review and study of the existing federal criminal laws relating to crimes against Negroes who are seeking their civil rights.... There should be immediate action by the House Judiciary Committee."

Willis -- Under House rules, his Committee may probe "the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is...of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution." Any group "that engages in organized large-scale intimidation in the political, economic and social fields and terrorizes individuals and groups attacks the very roots of the democratic process...because it destroys freedom and, without free citizens, our representative form of government is not secure and cannot be preserved." It is "too soon to predict what kind of legislation might be indicated to deal with the Klan...."

William F. Ryan (D N.Y.) -- The proposed investigation "will be an opening wedge for some kind of 'witch hunt' into the civil rights organizations."

Prentiss Walker (R Miss.) -- "Since amendments (to the resolution) are not allowed under the (House) rules, ...we should defeat this resolution until there can be a thorough investigation of" not only the Klan but the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC).

Phillip Burton (D Calif.) -- "The nub of the issue, simply stated, is this: no committee of the Congress has the authority to determine whether or not any organization, including the Klan, will be proved to be un-American. There is separation of powers in our Government."

John H. Buchanan Jr. (R Ala.) -- "If the Klan is innocent, as its leaders maintain, then they have nothing to fear from investigation. If guilty, then investigation and corrective action are long overdue."

James H. Scheuer (D N.Y.) -- Because "the choice is between no investigation and one by the House Un-American Activities Committee, I shall vote for an investigation."

Committee Hearings

A special five-member subcommittee of the Un-American Activities Committee held public hearings Oct. 19-22, 25-28; Nov. 1-4 and 9 as part of the Committee's investigation of the Klan. The Subcommittee consisted of Committee Chairman Edwin E. Willis (D La.) and Reps. Joe R. Pool (D Texas), Charles L. Weltner (D Ga.), John M. Ashbrook (R Ohio) and John H. Buchanan Jr. (R Ala.).

The public hearings were launched following a six-month preliminary investigation of the Klan. Evidence obtained during this period prompted Chairman Willis to declare that the results of the Subcommittee's hearings "will not be pretty."

The preliminary investigation focused on three main facets: (1) the finances of the Klan, which Weltner Sept. 23 called the Klan's "Achilles Heel," suggesting that the various Klan organizations were engaged in internecine warfare "for money and power and control"; (2) the extent to which the Klan had been participating in organized violence; and (3) any connections between the Klan and local law enforcement agencies.

Committee members said the preliminary study had revealed a number of "terroristic actions." For example, Ashbrook, senior GOP member of the Committee, Sept. 28 said, "The minute I walk into these hearings it is like entering another world where all of the values which are meaningful to me -- law and order, respect for your fellow human being, justice -- go out the window. You enter an eerie world where guns, beatings, exhortations to violence, hate, arson, bombings, shootings, blacklists, sugar in gas tanks, night rides, become commonplace and traditional values are scoffed at."

Weltner Sept. 23 told the House that making public the story of the Klan's activities "should destroy any illusion about the Klan's pretense of patriotism, democracy, Christianity and devotion to law and order. The Klan is as faithful to the ideals of America as the Communist party, and as true to the democratic process as the John Birch Society. It displays as much Christian concern for mankind as the Black Muslims and as much devotion to law and order as the American Nazi party."

Highlights of hearings:

Willis, Appell Statements

Oct. 19 -- Chairman Willis' opening statement emphasized that "this is an inquiry, not a prosecution." He said that "Klan leaders and members will have nothing to fear or lose by cooperating fully with the Committee by telling all and everything known about Klan operations. They have nothing to fear or lose, that is, if they have nothing to hide -- nothing to hide from Congress, nothing to hide from the American people and nothing to hide from the rank-and-file Klan membership."

that, could force the Klan to move underground into deeper secrecy.

The record of previous Congressional investigations -- one in 1871 and one in 1921 -- yielded little hope that the Committee's investigation alone would suppress the Klan. In addition, it required that a member "believe in the inalienable right of self-preservation of the people against the exercise of arbitrary and unlicensed power."

As resentment against Reconstruction rose, and as Klan membership increased, more and more acts of violence such as whippings and tar-and-feather parties were associated with the Klan. Severe anti-Klan laws passed by the carpetbag state governments and by the Federal Government (based on the 14th and 15th Amendments) failed to suppress the Klan effectively. (Between 1866 and 1875, Congress enacted five major civil rights and Reconstruction laws, but by 1910 these Acts had been so modified by further statutes or so narrowly construed -- or declared unconstitutional -- by the Supreme Court that they had very little effect.)

By 1871, Northern public opinion was sufficiently outraged by tales of Klan violence to bring pressure on Congress to investigate Klan activities. In 1871, a 21-member group -- the Joint Select Committee to Inquire into the Condition of Affairs in the Late Insurrectionary States -- traveled through the South taking extensive testimony. Following its investigation, the Committee issued a 13-volume report including transcripts of most of the testimony as well as majority and minority views of its findings. Basically, the majority of 13 Republicans declared that the Klan constituted a criminal conspiracy against the laws of the land and against Negroes. The minority of eight Democrats viewed the Klan merely as a vigilance committee that was a natural outgrowth of misgovernment and exploitation of the South by Radical Republicans.

In September 1877, Gen. Forrest ordered disbandment of the Klan, suggesting that it had been "perverted" in some communities. By then, however, its mission of overthrowing carpetbag rule and restoring white supremacy had been accomplished, for the most part.

FIRST REVIVAL

The first revival of the Klan in 1915 was attributed largely to the success of the movie, "Birth of a Nation," which glorified the Klan and emphasized the hardships of Reconstruction. On Thanksgiving Day, 1915, William J. Simmons and 14 followers climbed Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, and founded the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which Simmons claimed to be a reincarnation of the old Klan. The constitution, titles and regalia of the earlier Klan were carried over intact into the new organization, but the initiation ceremony included at least one innovation: the burning of a cross.

The revived Klan, at first mainly a fraternal and patriotic order, struggled along with few members and very little income until June 7, 1920, when Simmons sought to improve the financial situation and signed a contract with two publicity agents, Edward Young Clarke and Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler. The publicists, who received a large part of the initiation fees in return for their services, expanded the Klan from a Southern to a national organization. Picturing the Klan as a defender of "true Americanism" and morality, they transformed it into an organization catering to every imaginable American prejudice. A "hate campaign" was launched not only against Negroes, but also against Jews, Catholics, aliens and radicals, and a variety of "evils" such as bootlegging, repeal of prohibition, sex, birth control, internationalism, and working on the Sabbath. Much of the success of the publicity campaign was due to the "Red Scare" of 1919-21 which had made the country fearful of radical foreign ideologies; a new flood of immigration after World War I; and a general stirring of latent hostilities toward racial, religious and ethnic minority groups. Membership increased tremendously in the South and -- more important -- spread to nearly all parts of the country. Fiery crosses were burned in many parts of the North.

Again, alarm over Klan activities brought pressure for a Congressional investigation, but little was done. Much of the alarm was generated or reinforced by a series of sensational articles in the New York World and a score of other newspapers, charging that the Klan was responsible -- directly or indirectly -- for a long list of killings, floggings and kidnapings. Four resolutions calling for an investigation of the Klan were introduced in the House in September and October 1921. The Rules Committee held hearings on the proposals, at which Simmons testified for several days that violence associated with the Klan was actually the work of others masquerading as Klan members. The Rules Committee failed to provide a rule for House floor consideration of any of the resolutions, and the matter was dropped by Congress.

Instead of receding in the face of widespread publicity, the Klan gained membership, growing to a strength estimated in 1925 at somewhere between 2 million and 6 million members. In 1922, under new leadership, the Klan placed all its officials on salary and used its money to influence the outcome of the 1924 elections. A number of Klan periodicals were distributed nationally.

During the 1924 election campaign the Klan reached the peak of its political power. As many as 300 delegates to the Democratic national convention in Madison Square Garden were thought to be Klan members, and a resolution to denounce the Klan by name in the Democratic platform was defeated by a margin of only one vote.

In the November 1924 elections, the Klan was credited with putting in office at least three governors (all Republicans) and six Senators. It reportedly held extensive political power in Colorado, Indiana, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas and West Virginia and to a lesser extent in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

The Klan shrank rapidly, however, in the late 1920s. The nationwide decline was attributed chiefly to a lessening of postwar tensions and to subsidence of the fear of Bolshevism and of Papal influence. In addition, the Klan lost influence in specific areas for other reasons. For instance, the top Klan leader in Indiana was sentenced to life imprisonment for murder. By 1940, total membership was estimated at 300,000, of which all but 30 percent was in the South. The revived Klan was formally disbanded April 23, 1944.

THE MODERN KLAN

The flourishing of the Klan after World War II was due in large part to the failure of more respectable groups like the White Citizens Councils to halt the advance of desegregation. Its renaissance was stimulated by federal actions which threatened white supremacy.

In 1944 the Supreme Court voided the South's white primaries, and in 1946 the Klan was called to action by an Atlanta obstetrician, Dr. Samuel Green. With Green's death in 1949 the Klan split into several groups, and it remained splintered. The growth of the various groups was given a new impetus from the Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision, but it was enactment -- or expectation of enactment -- of the Civil Rights Act in 1964 that produced the largest postwar increase in Klan membership.

Total membership was estimated at the beginning of 1965 at about 10,000, and, with isolated exceptions, Klan membership was entirely in the South. The largest group was believed to be the United Klans of America Inc., with 5,000 members. It was headed by Robert M. Shelton, Jr., with headquarters in Tuscaloosa, Ala. Other groups reported to have 500 or more members were the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of Mississippi, the Original Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in Louisiana and the United Florida Ku Klux Klan. Actual Klan membership was supplemented by women's auxiliaries and a large number of "active sympathizers" who were not actually dues-paying members. In addition, Klans or Klan-like organizations masqueraded as hunting and fishing clubs, country improvement associations and gun clubs.

Klan members were implicated in most of the violent anti-Negro activities in the South in the early 1960s -- a series of bombings in Birmingham in 1963, the murders of three civil rights workers in Mississippi in 1964, the highway murder of Washington, D.C., educator Lemuel A. Penn in Georgia in 1964, and the 1965 slaying of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo near Selma, Ala.

Committee Funds

The Un-American Activities Committee in 1965 received two separate authorizations to support its investigative functions during the year. The first, voted in February, authorized funds for general Committee expenses, including preliminary inquiries into the activities of the Black Muslims, the Minutemen, the American Nazi Party and the Klan, which had been requested by several House Members. The second, voted in April following a nationwide television plea by President Johnson for tighter federal controls over Klan and similar activities, authorized funds for a full-scale investigation of the Klan.

GENERAL EXPENSES

The House Feb. 25, by a 360-29 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 188) authorizing $370,000 for general expenses of the Committee during 1965. Prior to final action, the House rejected on a 58-333 roll call a motion by Don Edwards (D Calif.) to recommit the resolution to the House Administration Committee with instructions that it hold open hearings on the justification for the funds request. The House Administration Committee had reported H Res 188 (H Rept 109) Feb. 25. The vote breakdown on final passage: R 125-0; ND 140-29; SD 95-0. The breakdown on recommittal: R 1-126; ND 56-113; SD 1-94. (For voting, see chart p. 940)

H Res 188 was one of a group of resolutions adopted by the House Feb. 24 and 25 providing investigation and study funds for committees in 1965. All other resolutions were adopted by voice vote. The resolutions provided a total of $3,755,250 for the expenses of the House committees, including Un-American Activities.

In 1961, when Un-American Activities Committee funds were subjected to floor attack, only six Members voted to cut the authorization (R 172-0; D 240-6). In 1963, 20 Members voted against providing funds for the Committee (R 169-0; D 217-20). However, there was no proposal in those years that was similar to the 1965 recommittal motion. (1961 Almanac p. 1015; 1963 Almanac p. 381)

During floor debate Feb. 25, Edwards urged support of his recommittal motion, stating that the Committee's "existence is patently unconstitutional in at least two respects -- its practice of investigating with no legislative purpose but exclusively for purposes of exposure, and secondly, its practice of holding legislative trials in violation of Section 9, Title 1 of the Constitution proscribing bills of attainder." (A long-time foe of the Committee, Edwards Jan. 5 had introduced a resolution (H Res 23) "to abolish" the Committee and to transfer its functions to the House Judiciary Committee. Similar resolutions had been introduced in the House Jan. 5 by Reps. Phillip Burton (D Calif.), Leonard Farbstein (D N.Y.), Augustus F. Hawkins (D Calif.), John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.), James Roosevelt (D Calif.) and Benjamin Rosenthal (D N.Y.), and Jan. 6 by Rep. Charles C. Diggs Jr. (D Mich.).)

On the two Feb. 25 roll calls, 29 of the 58 Members who voted for recommittal also voted against providing funds for the Committee. The other 29 who supported recommittal subsequently voted to provide the funds. One of the latter group, Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.), said he was in favor of the resolution to provide funds but that he would support recommittal "because I am tired of these unsubstantiated charges against the Committee ....Let us have hearings where witnesses can be heard and we can have cross-examination."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- March 10 -- Several House Democrats complained in floor speeches that recent Republican Congressional Campaign Committee news releases constituted a "smear attack." Freshman Rep. Teno Roncalio (D Wyo.) inserted in the Congressional Record the text of this GOP release sent to his home state: "The Republican Congressional Committee charged that Rep. Teno Roncalio (D Wyo.) tried to cripple the House Un-American Activities Committee by voting to withhold funds from the Committee pending public 'hearings' to 'justify' its budget request. Fortunately the Congressman's vote was not decisive because the vast majority of House Members realized the importance of having a committee of Congress with powers to investigate subversive activities....Unfortunately Congressman Roncalio's vote has lined him up with every subversive organization in the country which is trying to abolish the Committee."

Rep. John R. Schmidhauser (D Iowa), another freshman, also complained of being singled out in the Republican Committee's news release. He said the Committee was attempting to inject "an element of viciousness" into the political life of his district. House Majority Leader Carl Albert (D Okla.) warned the Republicans that "trying to convict by association" has not "paid off with the American voters."

PRESIDENT ASKS KLAN PROBE

President Johnson March 26 announced on nationwide television an all-out effort to "bring the activities of the Klan under effective control of the law" and suggested that "in connection with new legislation Congressional committees may wish to investigate the activities of such organizations and the part that they play in instigating violence...." The President made his statement in announcing the arrest and arraignment of four Klan members in connection with the March 25 slaying of a white civil rights worker near Montgomery, Ala.

The actions were triggered specifically by the ambush murder of Mrs. Viola Liuzzo of Detroit, who was killed while she drove Negro civil rights workers back to Selma, Ala., after a march to Montgomery which ended March 25. The President said that "Mrs. Liuzzo went to Alabama to serve the struggle for justice. She was murdered by the enemies of justice who for decades have used the rope and the gun and the tar and the feathers to terrorize their neighbors."

The four Klan members were arraigned and jailed March 26, and three of them were released on posting $50,000 bail that day. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, which arrested them, charged them with conspiring to violate the civil rights of Mrs. Liuzzo, in violation of an 1870 civil rights law.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- March 26 -- Asked to comment on the President's statement, Imperial Wizard of the United Klans of America Inc., Robert M. Shelton Jr. of Tuscaloosa, Ala., said, "He's a damn liar.... This organization has never used tar and feathers and a rope.... He's got the shoe on the other foot. From all indications of what the people of Alabama have been through in the last week, it is he that is using the gun and the rope -- his tanks and ammunition against the Southerner instead of the Klan against the Negro."

March 27 -- Shelton charged that the murders of Mrs. Liuzzo and Rev. James J. Reeb, a white minister who died March 11 from skull injuries inflicted by white men after he participated in a civil rights demonstration in Alabama March 9, were part of a "trumped up Communist plot to destroy the right wing in America."

The President's call for legislation to curb Klan activities was endorsed by 21 GOP House Members: Baldwin (Calif.), Bell (Calif.), Broomfield (Mich.), Cahill (N.J.), Cleveland (N.H.), Conte (Mass.), Curtis (Mo.), Dwyer (N.J.), Ellsworth (Kan.), Harvey (Mich.), Goodell (N.Y.), Horton (N.Y.), Keith (Mass.), Mathias (Md.), McDade (Pa.), Morse (Mass.), Quie (Minn.), Robison (N.Y.), Rumsfeld (Ill.), Stafford (Vt.) and Tupper (Maine).

Oct. 22 -- Klan member Collie Leroy Wilkins Jr., one of the four persons arrested March 26 in connection with the slaying of Mrs. Liuzzo, was acquitted of murder charges by an all-white jury in Hayneville, Ala. An earlier proceeding in the case was declared a mistrial May 7. On Oct. 20, the Alabama Supreme Court had rejected an appeal by Alabama Attorney General Richmond Flowers to bar 11 avowed white supremacists from the jury in the second Wilkins trial.

Oct. 27 -- Flowers said Wilkins' acquittal had given the influence of the Klan a "tremendous boost" but would bring new laws making the murder of a civil rights worker a federal crime to be tried in federal courts.

KLAN PROBE EXPENSES

The House April 14, by a 313-43 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 310) authorizing additional expenditures of $50,000 by the Un-American Activities Committee for its public investigation of the Klan. The vote breakdown: R 108-3; ND 127-35; SD 78-5. (For voting, see chart p. 952)

The additional funds were requested after the Committee March 30 voted unanimously to conduct the full Klan investigation suggested by President Johnson. The request was approved (H Rept 242) by the House Administration Committee April 14.

Among those opposing H Res 310 were several who rarely saw eye-to-eye on issues. Many of these were in accord only in opposition to the resolution; their reasons were widely divergent. The 35 Northern Democrats opposing passage included four Negroes: Conyers (Mich.), Diggs (Mich.), Hawkins (Calif.) and Powell (N.Y.). (The other two Negroes in the House did not vote.) The Southern Democrats in opposition were Gonzalez (Texas), Lennon (N.C.), O'Neal (Ga.), Smith (Va.) and Whitten (Miss.). The Republican opponents were two Southern freshmen -- Callaway (Ga.) and Walker (Miss.) -- and a Northerner -- Saylor (Pa.).

DEBATE -- April 14 -- Don Edwards (D Calif.) -- "We are not talking about an investigation of the Ku Klux Klan for purposes of punishing the...Klan" or publicizing the "beliefs and associations of private individuals. Such activities are clearly outside the authority of a Congressional committee." Instead, "we are talking about a review and study of the existing federal criminal laws relating to crimes against Negroes who are seeking their civil rights.... There should be immediate action by the House Judiciary Committee."

Willis -- Under House rules, his Committee may probe "the diffusion within the United States of subversive and un-American propaganda that is...of a domestic origin and attacks the principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution." Any group "that engages in organized large-scale intimidation in the political, economic and social fields and terrorizes individuals and groups attacks the very roots of the democratic process...because it destroys freedom and, without free citizens, our representative form of government is not secure and cannot be preserved." It is "too soon to predict what kind of legislation might be indicated to deal with the Klan...."

William F. Ryan (D N.Y.) -- The proposed investigation "will be an opening wedge for some kind of 'witch hunt' into the civil rights organizations."

Prentiss Walker (R Miss.) -- "Since amendments (to the resolution) are not allowed under the (House) rules, ...we should defeat this resolution until there can be a thorough investigation of" not only the Klan but the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), the Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC).

Phillip Burton (D Calif.) -- "The nub of the issue, simply stated, is this: no committee of the Congress has the authority to determine whether or not any organization, including the Klan, will be proved to be un-American. There is separation of powers in our Government."

John H. Buchanan Jr. (R Ala.) -- "If the Klan is innocent, as its leaders maintain, then they have nothing to fear from investigation. If guilty, then investigation and corrective action are long overdue."

James H. Scheuer (D N.Y.) -- Because "the choice is between no investigation and one by the House Un-American Activities Committee, I shall vote for an investigation."

Committee Hearings

A special five-member subcommittee of the Un-American Activities Committee held public hearings Oct. 19-22, 25-28; Nov. 1-4 and 9 as part of the Committee's investigation of the Klan. The Subcommittee consisted of Committee Chairman Edwin E. Willis (D La.) and Reps. Joe R. Pool (D Texas), Charles L. Weltner (D Ga.), John M. Ashbrook (R Ohio) and John H. Buchanan Jr. (R Ala.).

The public hearings were launched following a six-month preliminary investigation of the Klan. Evidence obtained during this period prompted Chairman Willis to declare that the results of the Subcommittee's hearings "will not be pretty."

The preliminary investigation focused on three main facets: (1) the finances of the Klan, which Weltner Sept. 23 called the Klan's "Achilles Heel," suggesting that the various Klan organizations were engaged in internecine warfare "for money and power and control"; (2) the extent to which the Klan had been participating in organized violence; and (3) any connections between the Klan and local law enforcement agencies.

Committee members said the preliminary study had revealed a number of "terroristic actions." For example, Ashbrook, senior GOP member of the Committee, Sept. 28 said, "The minute I walk into these hearings it is like entering another world where all of the values which are meaningful to me -- law and order, respect for your fellow human being, justice -- go out the window. You enter an eerie world where guns, beatings, exhortations to violence, hate, arson, bombings, shootings, blacklists, sugar in gas tanks, night rides, become commonplace and traditional values are scoffed at."

Weltner Sept. 23 told the House that making public the story of the Klan's activities "should destroy any illusion about the Klan's pretense of patriotism, democracy, Christianity and devotion to law and order. The Klan is as faithful to the ideals of America as the Communist party, and as true to the democratic process as the John Birch Society. It displays as much Christian concern for mankind as the Black Muslims and as much devotion to law and order as the American Nazi party."

Highlights of hearings:

Willis, Appell Statements

Oct. 19 -- Chairman Willis' opening statement emphasized that "this is an inquiry, not a prosecution." He said that "Klan leaders and members will have nothing to fear or lose by cooperating fully with the Committee by telling all and everything known about Klan operations. They have nothing to fear or lose, that is, if they have nothing to hide -- nothing to hide from Congress, nothing to hide from the American people and nothing to hide from the rank-and-file Klan membership."

The Committee's chief investigator, Donald T. Appell, presented a summary of Klan history and activities.

He indicated there were 381 local Klan units (klaverns) in the South, of which 260 belonged to the United Klans of America Inc. Most Klan activity was centered in North and South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, he said, but there also were sizable organizations in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Wisconsin, Delaware, New York, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia and Arkansas. (For Klan nomenclature, see box)

Appell said there had been "some infiltration of law enforcement agencies by the Klans," but "the overwhelming majority" of Southern law officers were neither members nor sympathizers with the organization. However, he said, Klan members were free to commit violence in many areas for two reasons: they possessed citizens' band radios with which they could intercept police calls and flee before the police arrived; and because of community fear of the Klan, "a considerable period of time" often elapsed before violence was reported to police.

Shelton Appearance

Oct. 19 -- The first klansman to appear was Robert M. Shelton Jr., imperial wizard of the United Klans of America Inc., the largest Klan organization. Shelton stated his name, age (36) and birthplace and acknowledged that he had been subpenaed to appear but then declined to answer questions 73 times, stating, "I decline to answer because I honestly believe that to answer would tend to incriminate me and violate my rights under the 5th, the 1st, the 4th and the 14th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States."

Shelton was questioned at length about the Alabama Rescue Service in Tuscaloosa, his place of business, which the Subcommittee indicated was a "front" name for the local Klan organization. Also questioned were his wife, Betty Lou, and Mrs. Carol Long, both identified as employees of the Rescue Service. The two women also declined to answer numerous questions.

The Subcommittee then produced canceled checks written on the First National Bank of Tuscaloosa by the Alabama Rescue Service and signed by T.M. Montgomery and James L. Hendricks. After both women and Shelton failed to respond when asked whether Montgomery and Hendricks were Klan treasurers (klabees), Willis called Philip L. Schmitz, a handwriting expert who was head of the Veterans Administration document identification service. Schmitz testified that the signatures of Hendricks had been written by Mrs. Shelton and those of Montgomery by Mrs. Long.

Oct. 20 -- Shelton was questioned again about the Klan's financial resources and their relationship to the checking account of the Alabama Rescue Service. He was also asked whether a citizens' band network in Tuscaloosa was used to conduct Alabama Rescue Service business or to "intimidate Tuscaloosa, Ala., citizens," and whether the licenses for short-wave radios capable of monitoring police broadcasts had been obtained through the Alabama Rescue Service. Shelton again invoked his constitutional rights and refused to testify 83 times, making a total of 156 refusals in two days.

When Shelton also denied the Subcommittee's request for subpenaed Klan records, Willis mentioned the possibility of asking Congress to cite him for contempt.

Pool charged that through his "cover" organization Shelton had used Klan funds to buy two cars, groceries and a diamond ring.

Klan Nomenclature

The House Un-American Activities Committee Oct. 19 made public the following list of terms commonly used by Ku Klux Klan organizations:

The Invisible Empire -- The over-all territorial jurisdiction of a KKK organization.

Kloran -- The official ritual book of a KKK organization.

Klancraft -- KKK spirit and knowledge of all matters pertaining to the KKK.

Klecktokon -- The Klan initiation fee.

Kalendar -- The special Klan terminology to designate days, months and years.

Imperial Klonvocation -- A national convention of a KKK organization.

Imperial Kloncilium -- The supreme advisory and governing board of a KKK organization.

Realm -- A territorial subdivision of the invisible empire, embracing a state.

Province -- A territorial subdivision of a realm, embracing a Congressional district.

Klorero -- Area (state) convention; also the realm governing an advisory board.

Klonverse -- A convention of a province.

Klan, Klavern -- The smallest unit (local club) of a KKK organization.

Klanton -- The territorial jurisdiction of a Klan or Klavern.

Kloncave -- Secret convention or meeting of a Klan.

Aliens -- All persons who are not members of the KKK.

Klan Offices. The Committee also made public the following list of offices within the United Klans of America, Inc., the major Klan organization.

Imperial Wizard -- National president.

Grand Dragon -- State president.

Great Titan -- Highest province officer.

Exalted Cyclops -- President of local club or Klan or Klavern.

Klaliff -- Vice president.

Klokard -- Lecturer or director of propaganda.

Kludd -- Chaplain.

Kligrapp -- Secretary.

Klabee -- Treasurer.

Kladd -- Conductor of ceremonies.

Klarogo -- Inner guard.

Klexter -- Outer guard.

Imperial Klonsel -- National legal adviser.

Night-Hawk -- Auditor on national and state levels, in charge of candidates on local level.

Klokann Board -- Three members in local club that act as auditors and investigators.

On the national level the group of officers were known collectively as the Imperial Wizard and his Genii; on the state level, the Grand Dragon and his Hydras; on the province level, the Great Titan and his Furies; on the local level, the Exalted Cyclops and his Terrors.

Appell produced canceled checks totaling $4,000, which he said Shelton had received from the Dixie Engineering Co. of Mobile, Ala., in return for his help in obtaining construction contracts from the state highway department.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Oct. 18 -- Alabama Attorney General Richmond Flowers issued a 26-page "white paper" calling the Klan a "vicious, perverted" organization whose members were "portraits of despair (and) failures, socially and economically." The report contained preliminary findings of a Klan investigation launched by Flowers in April. Robert M. Creel, grand dragon of the United Klans in Alabama, termed the charges "a lot of mouth but no truth."

Oct. 18 -- Authorities in Crawfordville, Ga., announced the arrest of seven members of an armed Klan group, the "Black Shirts," on charges of forcing a Negro farmer off the road and beating him. Two members of the group, J. Howard Sims and Cecil W. Myers, had been acquitted Sept. 4, 1964, of murder charges in the slaying of Lemuel A. Penn, a Negro, on July 11, 1964.

Oct. 19 -- The Bureau of Public Roads announced it was withholding from Alabama $39,815 which the state had authorized to be used by consulting engineers for retention of "local agents" which the state required them to retain in order to qualify for state contracts. The Bureau said one of the agents was Klan leader Shelton, who had received $1,500.

Oct. 19 -- Federal Communications Commission Chairman E. William Henry ordered an investigation of the use of short-wave radio by Klan members. He said it was "a general rule" that "radio licenses are not to be used for any illegal purpose."

Oct. 20 -- In a statement following his appearance before the Subcommittee, Shelton said the investigation had been dictated by a "political desire to win favor with a minority group." He accused the Subcommittee of taking his wife "away from our three small children in Alabama, one of them...feverishly tossing in a sickbed," and questioned whether the next to be investigated would be "the Masons, the Knights of Columbus, the college fraternities or some other organized group that requires secret oaths of their members." (For Klan oath, see box)

North Carolina Klan

Oct. 20 -- In questions to the next witness, James Robertson Jones, grand dragon of the North Carolina chapter of the United Klans, Appell alleged irregularities in both the finances of the statewide Klan organization and Jones' personal financial records. Among these, Appell said, were Jones' use of false financial reports and of fraudulent hospital insurance and widows' benefit plans to obtain money from members; a large increase in Jones' personal income after he became grand dragon; and failure by Jones to file income tax returns between 1958 and 1964. Jones refused to respond to the charges and to produce subpenaed Klan documents.

The next subpenaed Klan witness was Virginia Grand Dragon Marshall Robert Kornegay, who Appell said had recently been moved from North Carolina to Virginia because the former state's Klan members had objected to his keeping premiums from canceled Klan insurance plans. Kornegay also declined to answer questions and to submit subpenaed Klan documents.

Oct. 22 -- The first three cooperative witnesses, including two former Klan members, presented testimony.

Rev. Jack Crum of Raleigh, N.C., described being threatened and harassed by Klan members while attending a Klan rally in Farmville, N.C., in 1964. The rally had been advertised as open to the "white public."

Joseph G. DuBois, who had been subpenaed as treasurer of the Goldsboro, N.C., klavern, surprised the Subcommittee by resigning from the Klan immediately upon taking the witness stand. He presented his klavern records to the Subcommittee and offered to answer questions, saying "the vows I took (as a Klan member) are secondary to my loyalty to this nation." He said he joined the Klan because it seemed to be working for "the betterment of this country" but was disillusioned when Klan leaders refused to testify. He said, "Anyone who takes the 5th Amendment either has something to hide or is a Communist."

DuBois testified that to his knowledge the Goldsboro klavern, whose cover name was the Wayne County Improvement Assn., had never engaged in any act of violence and that his only function as Klan officer was to keep the books. He said that, in an Oct. 17 meeting, all members of his klavern had supported his decision to submit their records to the Subcommittee because "we don't have anything to hide."

Rev. Roy Woodle, also subpenaed, said he was a bricklayer and itinerant preacher and until "a few weeks ago," when he resigned from the Klan, had been chaplain (grand kludd) of the realm of North Carolina. He said the Klan was a "fake" organization which preached "good things" -- segregation and Christianity -- but did nothing about them; it practiced intimidation and enriched its leaders with "Cadillacs, rib-eye steaks...and first-class motel rooms." Woodle added that the Klan

Klan Oath of Secrecy

Following is the Klan oath of secrecy, as reported to the House Un-American Activities Committee by investigator Donald T. Appell:

I most solemnly swear that I will forever keep sacredly secret the signs, words and grip and any and all other matters and knowledge of the Ku Klux Klan regarding which a most rigid secrecy must be maintained -- which may at any time be communicated to me -- and will never divulge same nor even cause same to be divulged to any person in the whole world unless I know positively that such a person is a member of this order in good and regular standing -- and not even then unless it be for the best interest of the order.

I most sacredly vow and most positively swear that I will never yield to bribe -- flattery -- threats -- passion -- punishment -- persecution -- persuasion -- nor any enticement whatever -- coming from or offered by any person or persons, male or female, for the purpose of obtaining from me a secret or secret information of the Ku Klux Klan. I will rather die than divulge same -- so help me God.

I swear that I will keep secure to myself a secret of a Klansman -- the crime of violating this solemn oath -- treason against the United States of America, rape and malicious murder alone excepted.

had grown because people were "ready to grab the first thing that comes along. (The Klan) told them they'd give them victory, that the schools wouldn't integrate. But the Klan don't have no program."

After he had resigned and told his story on a Sept. 9 CBS television documentary on the Klan, Woodle said, he had received threats including a call from Boyd Lee Hamby Sr., auditor (grand night hawk) for North Carolina, who had said he had "the authority to do away with me."

The Subcommittee called Hamby, who was present as a spectator, to allow him to deny the charge, but he invoked his constitutional rights in refusing to testify. Four other North Carolina Klan members also were called and declined to answer questions: James Huey Fisher, William R. Waltson, Wayne Duvault and Donald M. Leazer.

Oct. 25 -- Three North Carolina Klan members were questioned about alleged irregularities in Klan finances but refused to answer: former Grand Dragon Arthur C. Leonard; Fred L. Wilson, treasurer of the Rowan Sportsman's Club, which was identified as a "cover" name for a local klavern; and Grady B. Mars, vice president (grand klaliff) of the Klan in the state.

Former Klan member Richard J. Constantineau, a Wilmington, N.C., gun dealer, said he had resigned from the Klan because he didn't "think they have a program that is satisfactory" and because his wife was "worried about my activities." He turned over to the Subcommittee the records of guns purchased from him in 1962-64 and acknowledged that he had sold guns during that period to three Klan members.

Oct. 26 -- Marion W. Millis, sheriff of Hanover County, N.C. (Wilmington), presented the first public testimony of Klan involvement in local law enforcement agencies. He said that he and six of his deputies had joined the Klan in 1963, taking the standard Klan oath, in order to "observe and see if anything happened as far as disorder was concerned." He said that when "rumors got out that we were part of this organization," he had resigned and told his deputies to submit resignations. Several months later, Millis said, he found that one of the deputies, Charles B. Goodwin, had remained a member and in January 1964 had been elected vice president (grand klaliff) of the statewide Klan. In response to questions, Millis acknowledged that he had not informed the State Bureau of Investigation that he had "infiltrated the Klan." Asked how he felt about the Klan today, Millis said that "since some of this stuff has come out about Klan activities, I believe even Mr. Goodwin is frowning on it."

Robert E. Hudgins, conductor of ceremonies (imperial kladd) of the United Klans and an official of a North Carolina Klan province, acknowledged that he had been subpenaed but declined to answer further questions and to produce Klan documents requested in the subpena.

Oct. 27 -- The final witness from North Carolina, George F. Dorsett, chaplain (imperial kludd) of the United Klans, declined to answer all questions and to produce subpenaed Klan documents. The questions included allegations that he had been chaplain of a Klan group which had dissolved following a run-in with Lumbee Indians said to have been incited by the burning of crosses in front of their quarters; that he had termed the police present at Klan rallies "termites" and "rats"; and that a Klan Bureau of Investigation was active in checking civil rights marches and other interracial activities.

South Carolina, Georgia Klan

Oct. 27 -- Four South Carolina Klan members were called but declined to testify: Charles Elwood, treasurer of the state Klan; Furman Dean Williams, identified as the leader of a Klan "underground" unit trained in the use of weapons and explosives; Ralph Powers and Arthur Robert Nix.

Oct. 28 -- Robert E. Scoggin, grand dragon of the South Carolina chapter, was asked to explain alleged irregularities in his personal finances and questioned about the "underground" unit. He gave his name and acknowledged he had been subpenaed but refused to answer all further questions and to turn over subpenaed Klan documents.

Rep. Charles L. Weltner (D Ga.) strongly recommended that Klan leaders be cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to produce subpenaed documents. He said the Supreme Court had held in 1960 (McPhaul v. United States) that an officer of an organization was required to produce records under Congressional subpena.

The Subcommittee shifted its attention to the Georgia chapter of the United Klans, calling Grand Dragon Calvin F. Craig. He refused to comment on evidence reported by investigator Philip Manuel that the United Klans had conducted special schools in Georgia for training in judo, karate, explosive demolition and guerrilla warfare. He also declined to submit Klan documents requested in his subpena.

Nov. 1 -- Younger M. Newton, vice president of the South Carolina chapter and a manufacturer of Klan robes, declined to answer all questions.

Eight Georgia Klan members also failed to respond to questions: William A. Daniel Sr., exalted cyclops of an Atlanta klavern; George D. Sligh, a founder of the United Klans; James D. Newberry, treasurer of the Georgia realm; William B. Crowe; William Anderson; John L. Brock Jr., auditor of the Georgia realm; John M. Parker; and Grady C. Little. Much of the questioning concerned Nacirema Inc. ("American" spelled backwards), identified by Manuel as a now defunct organization of members and former members of the United Klans which had participated in racial bombings across the South.

Nov. 2 -- Leo Blackwell, chief of police in Griffin, Ga., described confiscating a large cache of weapons from the cars of five Klan members arrested in April 1964 for burning a cross in front of a cleaning shop run by two Negroes who were members of a local biracial committee. He said the men were tried for disturbing the peace, but following declaration of a mistrial they obtained a court order for return of the weapons. Asked if he had any recommendations for curbing the Klan, Blackwell suggested a federal law requiring registration of firearms.

Allen L. Bayne, one of the five Klan members arrested by Blackwell, was called but refused to testify.

Wesley G. Bailey, a Klan member from Clayton County, Ga., also declined to testify.

Nov. 3 -- Howard W. Smith, chief of police in Clayton County, testified that in May 1965 the Federal Aviation Agency (FAA) had rented office space in a Jonesboro, Ga., building owned by the local klavern under the "cover" name of the Clayton Civic Club. When informed in August of the identity of the civic club, Smith said, the FAA canceled the lease and moved immediately.

Charles M. Bartlett, inner guard (grand klarogo) of the Georgia realm, and Daniel E. Bruce, an incorporator of the Clayton Civic Club, declined to testify.

Nov. 4 -- Three alleged members of the Clayton Civic Club declined to testify: Robert L. Bing, Jimmy W. Wells and Walter B. Parr.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Oct. 31 -- Daniel Burros, 28, chief organizer (king kleagle) of the United Klans in New York, shot and killed himself after reading an Oct. 31 story in the New York Times which revealed his Jewish parentage and background. The story also presented evidence that he had been active in the American Nazi party. Willis Nov. 1 told reporters that Burros had been subpenaed to testify but there were no immediate plans to investigate the suicide.

Hearings Suspended

Nov. 9 -- Willis announced suspension of the Klan investigation until Jan. 4, 1966. The suspension was called, Willis said, at the request of Attorney General Nicholas deB. Katzenbach who felt that the scheduled public questioning of two Georgia Klan members allegedly involved in the July 1964 murder of Lemuel A. Penn might prejudice the Supreme Court's current consideration of the Penn case.

After announcing the suspension, Willis summarized developments during the initial hearings. As a result of the investigation, he said, the Federal Communications Commission had begun a study of misuse of citizens' band radios, and "I am sure that other agencies of the Executive Branch will want to take action." He said the Committee would turn over some of its documents to the Internal Revenue Service, the FCC and the Veterans Administration. "We are considering, of course, the recommendation of contempt citations," he added. As for an anti-Klan law, Willis said that "by the time the hearings are ended, the Congress will have all the facts it needs for purposes of remedial legislation."

One of the "most positive findings," Willis said, was that the "invisible empire is no longer so invisible." He said total Klan membership was "four or five times greater" than the previous estimate of 10,000, but it was "not a monolithic movement" because about a dozen separate groups were in operation. The Committee also found evidence, he said, that the United Klans of America had failed to report its income and to pay taxes on the income it had reported; that Klans made "extensive use" of "innocent-sounding" cover or front names; that Klan leaders had often retained Klan funds in their own accounts or under fictitious names and had kept funds from Klan insurance programs for themselves; that several Klan officials had criminal records; that Klan units had conducted schools to train members in techniques of violence; that cross burnings for purposes of intimidation were official parts of Klan activities; that Klan members used citizens' band radios to plan their activities and to interfere with local law enforcement activities; and that some Klan members were law enforcement officers.

1966 Action

The five-man subcommittee investigation of the Klan resumed Jan. 4, 1966, and continued through Feb. 24, when hearings were ended subject to call of Chairman Willis.

On Feb. 2, the House, acting on the recommendations of the full Committee, cited for contempt of Congress seven alleged members of the United Klans of America Inc. who had refused to produce Klan documents and records subpenaed during the 1965 phase of the investigation. (The citations did not involve the witnesses' failure to answer questions before the Subcommittee.) One of the contempt citations was adopted by roll-call vote, the rest by voice votes.

The first citation (H Res 699 -- H Rept 1241), which named Robert M. Shelton Jr., imperial wizard of the United Klans, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 344-28 (R 122-4; ND 142-23; SD 80-1), with Alton Lennon (D N.C.) the only Southerner voting in opposition. The contempt citations adopted by voice vote named six other Klan members: Calvin F. Craig (H Res 700 -- H Rept 1242), Georgia grand dragon; James Robertson Jones (H Res 701 -- H Rept 1243), North Carolina grand dragon; Marshall Robert Kornegay (H Res 702 -- H Rept 1244), Virginia grand dragon; Robert E. Scoggin (H Res 703 -- H Rept 1245), South Carolina grand dragon; Robert E. Hudgins (H Res 704 -- H Rept 1246), imperial kladd; and George F. Dorsett (H Res 705 -- H Rept 1247), imperial kludd.

Following House action, the citations were sent to the U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia for presentation to a federal grand jury. A grand jury March 3, 1966, indicted the seven on one count each. If convicted, they were subject to maximum penalties of $1,000 fines and one year in prison.

(Details of 1966 hearings and action on contempt citations will be carried in the 1966 Almanac.)

Related Committee Actions

Before holding hearings on the Klan, the Un-American Activities Committee held hearings in Chicago on the organization and objectives of the Communist Party in Illinois and a hearing in Washington, D.C., on life in Communist Cuba.

The three days of Chicago hearings, May 25-27, were marked by mass picketing and demonstrations within the hearing room against the Committee.

The Cuba hearing was held June 11 in connection with the Committee's investigation of student travel to Cuba. The witness was Juanita Castro, estranged sister of Premier Fidel Castro. Miss Castro testified that her brother's "obsession" was to destroy the United States. (For earlier developments in the Cuba travel investigation, see 1964 Almanac p. 993.)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 4 -- A federal district court in Washington, D.C., gave suspended jail terms and $100 fines to three persons who had refused to testify before a closed hearing of the Committee Dec. 7, 1964. The defendants were Mrs. Dagmar Wilson and Mrs. Donna Allen, both of Washington and leaders of Women Strike for Peace, and Russell Nixon of New York, manager of the National Guardian, a weekly newspaper. The three had been cited for contempt by the Committee Dec. 10, 1964, for declining to answer questions about their part in trying to obtain a visa for K. Yasui, leader of a Japanese peace group. Because Congress was not then in session, the contempt citation did not need to be voted on by the House. It was certified by the Speaker and sent directly to the U.S. Attorney. (1964 Almanac p. 993)

SUBCOMMITTEES EXAMINE FEDERAL 'INVASION OF PRIVACY'

Several Congressional subcommittees in 1965 considered the question of whether federal Executive Branch agencies were pursuing practices which constituted 'invasion of privacy.' Throughout the year, the Senate Judiciary Committee's Administrative Practice and Procedure Subcommittee held a general investigation of the subject, ranging from consideration of the use of "mail covers" to wiretapping. The House Government Operations Committee's Special Subcommittee on Invasion of Privacy and the Senate Judiciary Committee's Constitutional Rights Subcommittee held inquiries into the use of psychological testing by Government agencies, and the House Government Operations Committee issued a report on federal use of lie detectors in interrogation procedures.

'Invasion of Privacy' Probe

The Senate Judiciary Committee's Administrative Practice and Procedure Subcommittee in 1965 held hearings for 22 days on the question of "invasion of privacy" by the Federal Government.

A major issue under consideration was the use of "mail covers" by the Post Office Department -- a practice which had been strongly criticized by Subcommittee Chairman Edward V. Long (D Mo.). Under existing postal regulations, a postmaster was authorized to record all information obtainable from mail without opening it, at the request of any law enforcement official. While the provision allowed use of mail covers solely for the purpose of locating fugitives from justice, Long in 1964 said he was "convinced there is wide-open use of this surveillance technique with absolutely no effort at control," and introduced a bill to prohibit it. The issue received extensive consideration early in the 1965 hearings, and Long at that time renewed his request for legislation and called for a list of persons whose mail had been under surveillance. However, on March 9 Long announced he would hold his requests "in abeyance" because Postmaster General John A. Gronouski had agreed to "tighten up and centralize controls" over the use of mail covers. Gronouski June 16 announced new postal regulations limiting authority to order mail covers to chief and regional postal inspectors (instead of all postmasters) and providing that law enforcement officials had to request mail covers in writing and show reasonable grounds to justify their use.

Other issues examined during the Subcommittee hearings were the use of electronic eavesdropping devices -- from telephone taps to hidden microphones -- by the Food and Drug Administration, Internal Revenue Service and telephone companies; Post Office Department use of peepholes to watch for mail theft by employees; and opening of first-class mail by the IRS as an aid in collecting unpaid taxes. Gronouski April 12 wrote Long that he had discontinued the latter practice in 1964, but that, as it was permitted by statute, there was no guarantee that it would not be reinstituted by future Postmasters General. Therefore, the Senate June 15, on an 87-1 roll call, added a prohibition against this practice to the excise tax reduction bill (HR 8371), and the amendment was retained in conference. (See story, p. 835)

The Subcommittee investigation actually began in September 1964, when the Subcommittee sent a questionnaire to all federal agencies on surveillance activities. Long Jan. 11, 1965, said the partial response to the questionnaire indicated that federal agencies not engaged in security work had purchased a considerable quantity of surveillance equipment. At the start of the hearings (Feb. 18), Long said he was concerned that "literally thousands" of nonsecurity law enforcement agencies were "using more and more methods of surveillance upon the individual." Long said the Subcommittee had been refused information by "at least two Departments" of the Government, and had met with "less than complete candor" in the preliminary investigation. Hearings were held Feb. 18, 23-24, March 2-3, April 13, 27-28, May 5 and 6, June 7, July 13-15, 19-21 and 27, Aug. 9 and Oct. 18-20. Following are highlights of the testimony:

HEARINGS

Feb. 18 -- Harold K. Lipset, a private detective from San Francisco, demonstrated several electronic eavesdropping devices, including a transmitter and antenna in the form of a cocktail olive and toothpick which could be placed in a martini. Lipset also played back to the Subcommittee part of Long's opening statement which he had recorded through a tiny microphone hidden under a rose petal in a vase sitting in front of Long and connected to a concealed tape recorder. Subcommittee counsel Bernard Fensterwald Jr. displayed a similar device concealed in the base of an office stapler.

Emanuel Mittleman, of the Wireless Guitar Company, Brooklyn, N.Y., demonstrated how to convert a telephone into an eavesdropping device. Mittleman said the mechanism, once attached to a telephone, could be activated by a direct-dialing call to the telephone. From the time the telephone rings, Mittleman explained, all conversations in the room are transmitted, even if the telephone is on the hook. He said conversation in a room in Washington could be monitored from as far away as Hawaii by means of the device. Mittleman said he had sold about a dozen of the devices for $400 each. He refused to disclose the names of the buyers, but said none of the purchasers were Government agencies to the best of his knowledge. Asked if he would sell to anyone, Mittleman said, "If I believed it would be for a truly nefarious purpose, I'd think twice before selling it."

Paul W. Blye, a retired Bell Telephone Laboratories engineer, said a laser was being developed as an eavesdropping device which could be aimed at a room several blocks away to obtain a television picture of everything happening in the room, including the sound.

Ralph V. Ward, vice president of Mosler Research Products, Inc., of Danbury, Conn., displayed a catalogue of the firm's eavesdropping wares. Most electronic eavesdropping techniques, he said, fall into three categories -- telephone taps, hidden microphones and hidden radio transmitters. Holding up a tiny microphone, he explained: "This item is cotton-coated so it can easily be dyed with Tintex to match the interior of a room."

Other devices demonstrated to the Subcommittee included microphones concealed in a tie clasp, in a package of cigarettes, in a cigarette lighter, in a picture frame and in a woman's purse.

Mail Cover, Peepholes

Feb. 23 -- Henry B. Montague, chief postal inspector of the Post Office Department, testified that special mail covers were in effect for up to 750 individuals or companies at a time, and that there were currently about 1,000 mail covers a month. He said a mail cover was authorized only when there was a good reason to believe it might be instrumental in solving a crime. Information obtained from mail covers, he said, was used as a lead in investigations, not as evidence in court, and court tests had established the constitutionality of the practice. Montague cited as examples the use of mail covers in an income tax case against gambler Frank Costello, in the capture in Mexico of a rapist-murderer, and in cases of health insurance frauds against the elderly.

Louis J. Doyle, general counsel of the Post Office Department, testified that although there was no statutory authority for mail watches, there was no prohibition against them.

Long demanded that Postmaster General John A. Gronouski provide the Subcommittee with the names of approximately 24,000 persons whose mail had been put under surveillance over the past two years. Long said he was convinced there had been "abuses" of privacy and "lack of control" by the Government in mail covers. He gave the Department a week to submit the lists. In a letter to Long, Gronouski objected to releasing the names to the Subcommittee on the grounds that it would cast a "shadow" over innocent persons and might compromise both national security and criminal investigations.

Montague testified concerning the use of peepholes in Post Offices to permit a postal inspector to watch postal employees at work without being observed themselves. He said that in December 1964 Gronouski had ordered peepholes in restrooms closed, but said that peepholes still existed in locker rooms. Montague said the system helped postal inspectors to recover $285,000 in thefts from the mail in 1964. Without the lookouts, he said, "the mails would not enjoy such a high reputation" for safety from theft. Subcommittee Counsel Fensterwald said the cost to the Federal Government of operating and manning the peephole system approached $2.5 million a year.

Feb. 24 -- Jerome K. Keating, president of the National Assn. of Letter Carriers, and Patrick J. Nilan, appearing on behalf of the United Federation of Postal Clerks, opposed peepholes as an invasion of privacy and unwarranted by the expense involved. Keating said that out of a force of nearly 600,000 postal employees, only about 590 were arrested in an average year, which he called "a record of honesty and integrity almost unparalleled in any walk of life."

Post Office General Counsel Doyle and Deputy Commissioner of the Bureau of Customs Irving Fishman were asked about procedures used to determine what mail should not be delivered because it was obscene or foreign propaganda. Doyle read a letter from Gronouski which said that postal officials who refused to deliver material as obscene had to present a case to the courts for a ruling on the matter. The letter said the ultimate decision on what was obscene was up to the courts. Fishman said customs officials requested an addressee's permission to open any mail that looked bulky enough to be subject to import duties. If permission was not obtained the mail was returned to the sender. If permission was granted, the material was opened and inspected. If it included propaganda, the addressee was asked if he wanted it delivered, and if he did not, it was returned to the sender.

Doyle said the Department was instituting a new policy toward records of persons who requested delivery of propaganda from Communist countries. Instead of keeping permanent records, he said, after March 15 the Department would order the requests destroyed as soon as acted upon. He said the new policy resulted from a court decision which held that there was a danger that the Post Office records might be used by other agencies for other purposes.

Kennedy-Bolan Exchange

March 2 -- Thomas A. Bolan, a New York City attorney, who was put under a Post Office Department mail cover after U.S. prosecutors in 1963 indicted his law partner Roy M. Cohn on 10 counts of perjury and obstruction of justice, testified that Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.), when serving as Attorney General, tried to promote a Life Magazine expose of Teamster President James R. Hoffa, at a time when Hoffa was under indictment for mail fraud. According to Bolan, Kennedy sought to have the magazine publish an interview that he arranged in March 1961 between Life's Washington bureau chief, Henry Suydam, and a Teamster official, Sam Baron, who was opposed to Hoffa.

Bolan said that after Life published an article on Cohn while he was under indictment, Bolan subpenaed the magazine's files to learn whether the Justice Department had anything to do with the Cohn article. In the files he came across a memorandum dated March 6, 1961, from Suydam to E.K. Thompson, a Life editor in New York. In the memo Suydam told of being called into Kennedy's office and urged to publish an article about Baron, a man who "had been working directly with Kennedy in secret for the last two years...(and) was now so disillusioned and disgusted with the corruption he saw all around him, particularly as concerns Hoffa, that he has just about decided to make a public break with the union." Suydam wrote that Kennedy "suggested to this man that he make his break via an article in Life in the form of a personal expose of Hoffa." Bolan submitted a copy of the memorandum to the Subcommittee.

Bolan, in commenting on a Life article entitled "Did Roy Cohn Lie?", said that it created an "inflammatory and prejudicial atmosphere for the trial." The material subpenaed from Life, Bolan added, revealed that the author of the Cohn piece conferred with two Justice Department aides.

Subcommittee Chairman Edward V. Long (D Mo.) called Bolan's testimony "shocking" and said he would forward the testimony to the full Judiciary Committee. "It is obvious from your testimony that the Department of Justice was trying to try its case in the press," Long said. "To me that is a very serious charge," he added. (For Kennedy's reply, see March 3 testimony, below)

Both Cohn, who was chief counsel of the Senate Investigations Subcommittee in 1953-54 while Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) was chairman, and Bolan protested that the surveillance through mail covers and other actions had seriously hampered them in preparing the defense for Cohn's case. Cohn testified that he was subjected to two separate mail covers while under Government investigation of charges of which he was acquitted by a federal jury in July 1964.

Cohn said he was subjected to "highly unusual questions" by the federal grand jury that indicted him. In addition to questions about conversations with his clients, which Cohn claimed "violated the lawyer-client relationship," he said the jury asked him for the numbers of "all the telephones I normally use." "I couldn't figure out why they asked these questions," he said, "unless they planned to do something to them (the telephones)." Cohn added that, after learning of the Government's request for information from all the banks and brokerage firms with which he had dealings, he asked the court to have this practice stopped. Even though the judge issued a stoppage order, Cohn said, "It didn't stop."

Bolan told the Committee he accidentally learned that his mail was under surveillance when a substitute postman delivered a mail order cover dated March 29, 1963. It bore the warning to the postman: "Confidential-submit all first class mail to supervisor. Do not reveal this to addressee or other unauthorized person." Bolan said that he asked for, and got, a stoppage order from Federal Judge Archie Dawson, who described the practice as "shocking."

Chief Postal Inspector Henry B. Montague appeared before the Subcommittee without a list, requested by the Subcommittee Feb. 23, of persons whose mail had been under surveillance over the past two years. Chairman Long said that in view of talks with Postmaster General John A. Gronouski, "Our demand will be held in abeyance for a few days in hopes that further discussions will work out the matter satisfactorily."

(Long March 9 called a press conference to announce that he would continue to "hold in abeyance" his demands relating to mail covers because the Postmaster General had agreed to "tighten up and centralize controls" over their use. He said new regulations were currently being drawn up, and if they failed to eliminate all possibilities of abuse he would renew his campaign to have their use outlawed. He said he and Gronouski believed their agreement "would result in a good balance between the legitimate needs of law enforcement on the one hand and individual rights to privacy on the other."

Long also announced that Gronouski had agreed to eliminate peepholes in Post Office dressing rooms and areas used by employees when off duty.)

March 3 -- Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D N.Y.), in an appearance before the Subcommittee, protested against what he called the "implication that I handled myself in some shocking manner while I was Attorney General." Kennedy denied Bolan's charge and told Long that he considered it improper for the Subcommittee Chairman to make statements about the matter "after hearing only one side of the story."

When asked by Subcommittee Counsel Fensterwald whether Kennedy considered it proper for a public official to arrange for publicity unfavorable to a person under indictment, Kennedy said: "I never did anything like that and that is the implication of the testimony and remarks made before the Subcommittee yesterday."

(Kennedy March 2 had issued a statement denying that he had attempted to "plant" a story about Hoffa in Life magazine. He said that Baron was the originator of the idea and "in fear of his life" had gotten "in touch with me." "If he was killed," Kennedy said, Baron "wanted to be able to tell his story through Life magazine. I put him in touch. The story was not to be published unless something happened to him." Kennedy pointed out that no article had appeared in Life until after Baron had broken with Hoffa -- "this was about 12 or 18 months later" -- and that it then was a different kind of article. He added that he did not participate in the interview and that neither he nor the Justice Department furnished any information to Life "directly or indirectly."

Life editor Edward K. Thompson, contacted in New York, said "Sen. Kennedy's statement on this matter is basically correct." "Beyond introducing us to Baron," he added, "that was the last we heard of Kennedy.")

Herbert Warburton, former general counsel of the Post Office Department, testified that he believed peepholes used to watch for mail theft by employees in large post offices were outmoded. But he said that the Department's policy of checking mail deliveries to persons suspected of crimes was an essential law enforcement tool.

Lawrence Speiser, a spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, accused the Justice Department of "twisting and turning in every possible direction to avoid a constitutional test" of a law involving Government screening of foreign propaganda.

Henry J. Stoffer, president of the National League of Postmasters, called the Post Office Department's use of peepholes and mail cover practices essential to protection of the mails and law enforcement. He said these practices did not constitute serious invasions of personal privacy.

Surveillance of Tax Delinquents

April 13 -- The Committee took up charges that the Post Office Department and Internal Revenue Service had seized and opened first-class mail in the investigation and surveillance of tax delinquents. The charges were made by Rep. Durward G. Hall (R Mo.) in an April 5 press release in which he cited 14 such seizures and called for an investigation. In an April 12 letter to Long, Gronouski said the practice had been discontinued in August 1964 as a result of an agreement between himself and then Treasury Secretary Douglas Dillon. Gronouski said, "I am of the personal opinion that while discontinuance of this practice may in some instances increase the difficulty of collecting delinquent taxes, the practice should not be resumed because of the overriding importance of protecting the sanctity of the mails... While no levies on mail of delinquent taxpayers have been made since the agreement was reached, we cannot be certain that the same policy would be maintained in future years, as the authority to seize the mail is in the statute. Accordingly, I believe legislation is needed to guarantee maintenance of this policy." (Such legislation was enacted later in 1965. See above and p. 835)

Harvey H. Hannah, deputy general counsel of the Post Office Department, said the levy procedure was not instituted by the IRS until "late 1962 or early 1963." He said the Post Office Department honored an IRS mail levy by simply delivering the unopened mail to the IRS and did not open the mail itself.

FDA Investigatory Procedures

April 27 -- The Subcommittee took up charges that the Food and Drug Administration had used electronic "snooping devices" in its investigations. In an April 22 Senate speech, Long stated he had "considerable trouble" getting information on FDA investigatory practices from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and that he had become "suspicious" as to what HEW was "covering up or concealing." Long said the FDA had refused to send witnesses to the Subcommittee on request, and that the Subcommittee had issued subpenas directing certain FDA employees to appear at the hearings. Fensterwald subsequently said the FDA employees had been subpenaed to explain allegations that they had used "elaborate" methods, including concealed recording devices, to obtain evidence against a milk-substitute product in Kansas City, Mo., in 1963. The FDA was also asked to explain a similar raid on the Church of Scientology in the District of Columbia in January 1963, in which agents seized electronic equipment, so-called "E-meters," used by the church.

Former Georgia Governor Ellis Arnall (D 1943-47), defense counsel in the milk-substitute case, charged FDA agents with being "master spies" who used "un-American, police-state gestapo-like tactics." Arnall accused FDA agents of illegally recording evidence with "hidden tape recording devices," of planting evidence and committing perjury.

FDA Commissioner George P. Larrick said electronic equipment was needed in investigations to protect the public from modern "medicine men." Larrick indicated that in using electronic equipment to get evidence, particularly on illicit drug traffic, the FDA was dealing with "hardened criminals," and in "many cases" the courts had not objected to recording as an invasion of privacy.

Allen E. Rayfield of the FDA Bureau of Field Administration said the American public "squanders" an estimated $500 million a year on nutritional quackery. Recording devices, he said, were necessary to monitor sales spiels.

April 28 -- Assistant FDA Commissioner Winton B. Rankin said that Arnall had presented a "distortion of the facts and broad unsupported allegations."

Arnall charged the FDA witnesses with committing perjury before the Subcommittee and called the FDA "corrupt and contaminated."

Kirkpatrick W. Dilling, general counsel for the National Assn. of Food Supplement Manufacturers and Distributors, stated that FDA powers were "too often employed to trample upon the civil rights of regulated firms and individuals." Dilling said that two FDA inspectors had exceeded their legal authority by using concealed devices to record conversations in a "routine" factory inspection.

April 29 -- Oscar H. Brinkman, attorney for the Church of Scientology in the District of Columbia, said the FDA had planted a "spy" in the church prior to an FDA raid in which an "E-meter" device, used by the church to test "emotional reactions," was seized. Brinkman said the raid on church premises was a "flagrant violation" of constitutional rights protecting religion, and that the FDA could seize holy water and medallions at the Roman Catholic National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception with equal justification.

Long concluded the three-day hearings by charging FDA agents with spending their time in "police state tactics" and "bizarre and juvenile games of cops and robbers" instead of trying to safeguard the nation's health.

Industrial Use of Eavesdropping Devices

May 5 -- Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers of America, said local telephone companies used electronic monitoring equipment -- such as a microphone installed in a desk calendar at company offices -- to "eavesdrop" on conversations between their employees and customers. Beirne said he was concerned about such devices being "inflicted" on union members and about the "dangers posed by bribers and corrupters" who might try to use members to eavesdrop for them. Beirne said telephone companies were leaders in developing secret listening and transmitting devices, and he recommended strict federal limitations on the manufacture, sale and use of all eavesdropping equipment.

A spokesman for the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company acknowledged that electronic devices were used and said they were "a service aid to make sure the customer's problems are being taken care of."

Lee Loevinger, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, said existing laws and regulations were inadequate to cope with the electronic eavesdropping equipment now on the open market.

May 6 -- Lewis S. Rosenstiel, president of Schenley Industries Inc., said he suspected "competitors" of "financial and industrial espionage" after sound transmitters and wire taps were discovered concealed in a room where his company held business meetings. Rosenstiel said he became suspicious after details of a confidential meeting held in the room began to "leak out." He stated: "Failure of adequate law makes many American corporations prey for raiders."

Richard E. Gerstein, an attorney for the state of Florida, suggested that wiretapping equipment be reserved only to law enforcement officials and only in cases involving protection of human life, national security or extortion. Gerstein said police officers should have to obtain a court order to use the devices.

Long said he could see little difference between wiretapping and planting a secret transmitter in his house to pick up his private conversations. Long stated: "Either way you do it, isn't it causing me to testify against myself?"

IRS Use of Eavesdropping Devices

July 13 -- Internal Revenue Commissioner Sheldon S. Cohen and Attorney General Nicholas de B. Katzenbach acknowledged instances in which IRS agents had used wiretaps, hidden microphones and two-way mirrors in investigating suspected tax fraud and evasion. However, both officials contended the incidents, most of which occurred in Pittsburgh, had occurred in the campaign against organized crime and involved persons designated as "racketeers" by the Justice Department's Organized Crime Section, and not ordinary taxpayers. Cohen described four instances in which Pittsburgh IRS agents had either used wiretaps, used information gained from wiretaps, or had eavesdropped on a conversation between suspects. Cohen stated that in each instance "devoted and courageous agents had acted in a misguided and unauthorized effort to abate some of the terror of organized crime." However, he said, "we cannot categorically shirk from using certain legal investigative equipment and techniques, even though this might in some cases subject us to criticism." Cohen stated that "the extraordinary nature of crime compelled extraordinary effort by the Service," and accordingly, the Service had "tooled up appropriately for its efforts," and bought "modern miniaturized electronic transmitting and receiving equipment." However, Cohen said, he June 29 issued a directive "unconditionally prohibiting" the use of wiretaps or making unreasonable search or seizure. Cohen also said a "number" of IRS investigative techniques had been terminated, including the use of two-way mirrors and concealed electronic transmitters in IRS offices.

Katzenbach charged that leading racketeers "will stop at nothing to discredit the federal effort against them" and that 60 percent of racketeering convictions "stem from devoted investigative work by intelligence agents of IRS." However, he said wiretapping constituted a "serious invasion of privacy and it should be allowed only in limited circumstances, under the strictest control...it should be permitted only where national security is involved." Katzenbach described instances of IRS wiretapping and "bugging" as "isolated" cases and "the product of the great energy and the massive momentum of the organized crime program."

Long said the Treasury Department had gone "far afield in enforcing criminal laws," a task which he said was "the province of the Justice Department." Long charged the IRS with "almost every...type of eavesdropping technique" and introduced several exhibits which he said proved invasions of privacy were much more widespread than Cohen had admitted.

July 14 -- Cresson O. Davis, head of the IRS intelligence division in Pittsburgh, contended there was a widespread "word-of-mouth" understanding among IRS agents that although wiretapping was against IRS regulations their use against racketeers was approved. Davis said some agents were trained in Washington in wiretapping methods because "racket owners use the same tactics... and are not bound by the same rules." Davis also said that IRS agents were taught electronic eavesdropping techniques, that the IRS supplied experts from Washington to install hidden recording devices, devices which Davis said were occasionally used to record conversations with taxpayers who were not racketeers. Davis said he did not know until recently that Pennsylvania law prohibited use of wiretaps. (Pennsylvania outlawed use of wiretaps in 1957.) Other IRS agents testified to their participation in wiretapping, eavesdropping and two-way mirror activities.

July 15 -- William O. Marsh, a Pittsburgh IRS agent testified he had participated in wiretapping and that he "believed there was implied authority to do this because of the equipment and instructions we had been given."

July 19 -- Boston IRS officials testified to participating in incidents involving illegal entry into a person's house, use of wiretaps, "snooper-scopes" to see in the dark, lock-picking instruments, and two-way mirrors and hidden microphones planted in IRS conference rooms. A Boston inspection agent said he had directed another agent to "assume a certain undercover identity" in an effort to obtain information during an investigation. Long said the assumed identity involved posing as a Coast Guard petty officer. (It is illegal to impersonate a military officer.) Similar testimony was given by IRS agents July 20.

July 21 -- Boston IRS agents were accused of "bullying" and harassment tactics by Boston Attorney Lawrence O'Donnell and industrialist Thomas Wheeler. O'Donnell attacked what he called the "excesses and abuses" of tax agents and "torture chamber" methods used by agents in getting information. Wheeler said a tax agent had "ruined me as a person, as a businessman and injured my family with his intimidations, tactics and flagrant misconduct." (According to a July 21 statement by Alvin Kelly, district director of Internal Revenue, Wheeler stood to serve five months imprisonment and pay "substantial fines based upon his jury conviction for five counts of income tax evasion." Kelly also said the IRS Intelligence Division was investigating reported tax evasion by O'Donnell.)

Long said IRS investigative methods should be changed, and he accused the IRS of having a "double set of standards." Long also accused the agency of "hiding behind the OCD" with its explanation that many violations were committed on behalf of the Justice Department's Organized Crime Drive.

July 27 -- The Subcommittee heard testimony from what Long called the "elite guard" of the IRS designed to keep a check on the approximately 63,000 IRS employees. Joseph R. Harmon, deputy chief of IRS Intelligence, and O. Burke Young, special IRS agent teaching in the Treasury Department's Electronic Devices School, admitted tapping the phones of their own IRS agents and others suspected of crime. Young testified to several instances of wiretapping which occurred before 1960, which he said were never ordered but "requested" by various branches of the IRS. Young also said he did not consider wiretaps against the law if information obtained from them was not divulged outside Government offices. Young conceded he had never seen a "letter" from the Assistant Commissioner of Inspections which he said authorized him in 1954 to place wiretaps in certain Government buildings.

The Subcommittee held additional hearings on IRS investigative methods Aug. 9 and Oct. 18-20.

President's Position

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- July 16 -- Presidential Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers said that President Johnson thought the Senate Subcommittee investigation was "in the public interest and that it was doing a service for the country." Moyers said the President opposed all wiretapping except when it related to national security, in which case use of wiretaps should be approved by the Attorney General. Moyers also said the President had made a "vigorous statement" on the subject of wiretaps at a recent Cabinet meeting.

July 30 -- Subcommittee Chairman Long said in a Senate speech that hearings on IRS investigative practices "have elicited no less than federal agents frequently violating federal and state laws and their own Department's clear and unequivocal policy directives." Long also said the IRS had "chosen to hedge its cooperation" with the Subcommittee, had refused or delayed requests for documents and had refused to answer questions before the Subcommittee, "on the thinnest excuse ever posed before a Congressional Committee": Paragraph 5 of IRS regulations directing IRS agents not to divulge names or details in information obtained from wiretaps or "bugs." Concerning the Justice Department's Organized Crime Drive, Long said the Subcommittee had "absolutely no desire to hinder the OCD program" but, he said, the OCD program, "at least in Pittsburgh, may not have had the salutory effect...expected." Long contended that after local Pittsburgh gamblers had been caught, a "vacuum" was created "into which the larger, interstate criminal elements immediately stepped." Long said the Subcommittee investigation would continue "until the complete story is told. This may take some time, for, as can be expected, those agencies that have violated our citizens' rights are not about to cooperate in their own indictment."

Sept. 22 -- Long inserted several newspaper reports in the Congressional Record. One, from the Aug. 2 Hartford (Conn.) Courant, reported that U.S. Attorney Jon O. Newman had instructed federal law-enforcement agencies in Connecticut to obey the federal ban on wiretapping. Other articles described a Chicago court case in which a federal judge dismissed indictments against two alleged gamblers because the IRS had used electronic eavesdropping devices to obtain evidence against them. Long said, "Now the IRS has been saying that the hearings of the Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure have been hurting the Organized Crime Drive. I think these articles indicate that one thing that hinders the Organized Crime Drive is the illegal and unconstitutional tactics used by IRS agents."

Personality Tests Investigated

Two other subcommittees in 1965 looked into the question of federal invasion of privacy, but focused on the field of psychological testing by Government agencies. One group of hearings was held by the House Government Operations Committee Special Subcommittee on Invasion of Privacy, which had been set up in 1964 under the chairmanship of Cornelius E. Gallagher (D N.J.). The second set of hearings were held by the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, under the chairmanship of Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.).

HOUSE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE -- House Government Operations, Special Subcommittee on Invasion of Privacy.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 2-4, 7 and 23 and Sept. 23 on federal invasion of privacy, particularly the use of personality tests.

TESTIMONY -- June 2 -- Gallagher said a Constitutional amendment might be necessary to guarantee Americans their right of privacy. Because of scientific advances in snooping techniques, Gallagher said, it was possible for a person to be under surveillance from the moment he got up until the moment he went to bed at night. "We have become a nation of snoopers," he said, "All of us may some day stand psychologically naked."

Gallagher recommended a federal law requiring the Post Office to obtain a warrant or court order before using a "mail cover"; federal controls over the manufacture, distribution, and sale of electronic devices "and other gadgets used for snooping purposes"; and an amendment to the Civil Rights Act of 1964 making electronic snooping a violation of that law. Gallagher cited a recent federal farm questionnaire as an invasion of privacy. The questionnaire, he said, asked farmers to detail their outside income and to submit data on everyone living in their house.

Dr. William M. Beany, professor of law at Princeton University, said that construction of certain "snooping devices" was so simple that users could assemble them themselves and thus evade a federal statute.

June 3 -- John W. Macy, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, said tests covering "personality traits" were not used for Civil Service job applicants because they failed to measure characteristics needed for a particular job; their results were "undependable" and could be "grossly misinterpreted and misapplied" and they "seriously jeopardized" an individual's "right to privacy." Macy said, however, that the Civil Service Commission "does not interfere with the use of psychological tools" needed in medical evaluations of applicants or employees. Macy added, "Our policy is intended to prohibit general use of personality tests as they are presently designed."

June 4 -- Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.), a Committee member, accused the Labor Department of invading the privacy of prospective job counselors through personality tests, which, he said, also contained some "frivolous" questions discriminating against Negroes. He cited one which asked, "Do you think Washington was greater than Lincoln?" Reuss said the answer required by the test was Washington and that a Negro would be wrong if he believed Lincoln was more important because he had freed the slaves. Reuss said other questions included: "I have been in trouble one or more times for my sex behavior"; "I have gone to store front churches or large churches"; and "My home life was less peaceful and quiet than other homes." Reuss said the Department was defying a Civil Service Commission order that the tests be dropped.

Leo R. Werts, Assistant Secretary of Labor, said he did not find the personality tests "objectionable to the vast majority of candidates" and that it was unnecessary to justify their use. "In our judgment, the use made of the test materials for the selection of youth counselor trainees was not an invasion of privacy," Werts said. Reuss told Werts his statement was an "insult to the Subcommittee and to me."

Dr. Abraham Carp, director of the Peace Corps Selection Division, said that the Corps used the 556-question Minnesota Multiphasic Personality Inventory (MMPI). Carp said the MMPI tests were "the only objective personality inventory which helps identify persons who may have or develop serious personality disorders." Responses to the questions were an important consideration, Carp said, in judging a candidate for overseas service. "Many MMPI items relate to attitudes toward sex, one's body, religion, one's parents and other personal matters," he said.

June 7 -- F. Kingston Berlew, Associate Peace Corps Director, announced the Peace Corps would drop 185 questions from the MMPI test. Berlew said the questions dropped were those to which neither answer was considered correct, but which were intended to help develop future tests. Berlew also said the Peace Corps would destroy test results and evaluations and would not require an applicant to take the test. Gallagher said the Subcommittee would press for elimination of as many remaining questions as possible.

SENATE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Constitutional Rights Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 7-10 on psychological testing by Government agencies.

TESTIMONY -- June 7 -- An official of the American Federation of Government Employees said the testing was "one of the most objectionable practices so far introduced into the personnel administration of the federal Civil Service." The official urged the Subcommittee to make specific recommendations for legislative action to end the procedure. He called the tests "impractical, unnecessary, scientifically questionable and damaging." He also said the "pseudo-psychological" testing used by the Government "infringes upon the employee's personal right to privacy" and violated the 4th and 5th Amendments.

Dr. Lewis K. Woodward, medical director of the State Department, and William J. Crockett, Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration, said the testing when "properly used, with the right attitude," was a program which would "conserve human resources." Crockett described the tests as "an occasionally used means of assisting in determining the employee's total health." Crockett said one test which included "offensive" questions on sex and religion was eliminated April 20. At the same time, he said, psychiatric tests and evaluations became voluntary; the employee was given a choice of psychiatrists; and the significance of the tests was more fully explained to the employee.

June 8 -- Dr. Arthur H. Brayfield, executive director of the American Psychological Assn., defended the general use of personality tests. However, Brayfield recommended that the National Academy of Sciences establish a task force to study Government agency testing.

Dr. Karl L. Smith, professor of industrial psychology at the University of Wisonsin, said the tests' significance was "near zero" and their use constituted "a form of medical quackery." He called the tests "simple-minded claptrap" and, noting that the MMPI was based on reactions of a group of mental patients 30 years ago, he said, "The meaning of the questions to Peace Corps or State Department people are not the same as they were to the poor unfortunates" who originally took the tests.

June 9 -- Peace Corps Director R. Sargent Shriver said the record of Peace Corps volunteers indicated that the selection process, including the controversial MMPI test, was successful. Shriver stated, "On a completed project basis, only eight percent of all volunteers have failed to complete their service for reasons related to personal adjustment... Fewer than seven-tenths of one percent have returned because of psychiatric difficulties."

June 10 -- Dr. George K. Bennett, president of the Psychological Corp. and New York publisher of the MMPI test, said the test should not be used routinely, but that in certain cases it could help to "inventory mental health...in the same objective way a physical examination officer searches for glaucoma or venereal disease."

W. Grant Dahlstrom, a University of North Carolina psychology professor and author of a manual on the MMPI test, defended the test as a "sensitive and accurate measuring device" when properly used. Dahlstrom conceded the test could have faults and suggested the Bureau of Standards aid in devising a better one.

Federal Lie Detector Tests

In another aspect of Congressional investigation of invasion of privacy, the House Government Operations Committee in March issued a report on federal use of lie detectors in interrogation procedures. The report was based on a 1963-64 study by the Foreign Operations and Government Information Subcommittee on the use of polygraphs by federal agencies in matters affecting security, crime, misconduct, personnel screening and medical requirements. (1964 Almanac p. 996) After issuance of the report, the Subcommittee May 25 and Aug. 19, 1965, heard additional FBI and Defense Department witnesses on use of lie detectors.

REPORT

COMMITTEE -- House Government Operations.

ACTION -- March 22 issued a report (H Rept 198) on federal use of lie detectors in interrogation procedures.

Majority Views. The March 22 report stated there was no "lie detector," either human or machine. It said, "People have been deceived by a myth that a metal box in the hands of an investigator can detect truth or falsehood." While federal investigators had testified to their faith in the polygraph technique, the report said, they had also admitted there were no statistics or facts to prove its value. The "overwhelming majority" of polygraph operators had neither the training nor qualifications for their work, the report stated. The polygraph examination had become a "crutch," the report added, "in too many cases replacing proven procedures of criminal investigation and serving as a weak link in our security system."

The Committee report recommended that the Federal Government: initiate research on the validity of polygraph examinations; prohibit use of polygraphs except in serious national security and criminal cases; improve training of federal polygraph users; restrict use of two-way mirrors and recording devices in polygraph examinations; guarantee that polygraph examinations be voluntary; and insure that refusal to take the polygraph examination not be made part of an individual's records except in serious national security cases. The report further recommended that the President establish an interagency committee to study federal use of polygraphs.

Additional Views. Rep. Cornelius E. Gallagher (D N.J.) said, "The use of polygraphs by the Federal Government should be discontinued...immediately until they are proved to be infallible -- a day which I doubt will ever come."

Rep. Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.) said polygraphs could be a "valuable aid" in screening personnel and in other uses if operated by qualified persons.

Reps. Rumsfeld (R Ill.), Dickinson (R Ala.), Erlenborn (R Ill.), Callaway (R Ga.) and Gurney (R Fla.) did not participate in the report.

HEARINGS

The Foreign Operations and Government Information Subcommittee May 25 heard Federal Bureau of Investigation officials testify on the usefulness of polygraph machines. The officials said the lie detector could be "fooled" by alcohol, drugs, aspirin, coffee, physical or mental malfunction and by well-trained spies. The officials insisted, however, that lie detectors could "indicate deception" and were a useful investigative aid when properly used, although the FBI did not consider the instrument good enough for screening its own personnel. Subcommittee Chairman John E. Moss (D Calif.) said there was "very little if any validity" in using the polygraph and that he would "absolutely refuse to submit to a polygraph examination for any purpose."

The Subcommittee Aug. 19 heard Defense Department witnesses testify on the use of polygraph machines. On Sept. 19 Rep. David S. King (D Utah), who presided at the hearings, introduced a bill (HR 11057) making it a federal crime to divulge information acquired by Government investigation to anyone other than Government officials. He said the bill had been drawn up because a Department of Defense witness at the Aug. 19 hearing had testified that "investigative material collected under the industrial security program sometimes gets back to employers."

SENATE AND HOUSE UNITS PROBE BANK FAILURES

Key Senate and House subcommittees in 1965 launched a major investigation of the nation's commercial banking industry. Results of the probe, which led to the introduction of legislation to improve federal bank regulatory measures, showed that, in certain cases, irregular and illegal activities by persons of questionable reputation, who had infiltrated banking management, had caused bank failures.

Hearings by the Senate Government Operations Permanent Investigations Subcommittee and the House Banking and Currency Domestic Finance Subcommittee were occasioned by a recent increase in federally insured bank failures (see box) and by indications of the "milking" of bank assets by criminal elements and of intensive, and often overly risky and illegal, bank lending competition. Other banking problems giving rise to Congressional concern included dissension between the three Government agencies that shared responsibility for the regulation of banks -- the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC); the rapid increase in new national banks chartered in the period 1961-65; and allegations of political influence in the chartering of new banks.

The principal federal banking official coming under the Congressional spotlight was Comptroller of the Currency James J. Saxon, whose liberal chartering and other banking policies since assuming office in 1961 were viewed askance by the generally conservative banking community and other federal banking officials. In the period 1961-65, for example, Saxon had chartered 434 new national banks, while only 227 new charters had been issued in the 10 years prior to his appointment. Saxon had previously come under Congressional fire, when on Dec. 9, 1964, he was asked by the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, which was probing the activities of former Secretary to the Senate Majority Robert G. (Bobby) Baker, to testify concerning allegations that political influence had been used to obtain charters for certain new national banks. In particular, Saxon denied that any pressure was exerted on his office to approve the charter for the District of Columbia National Bank, in which Baker and Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), second-ranking Democrat on the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, were large stockholders. (1964 Almanac p. 966)

The bank failure investigation centered on four banks -- the San Francisco and Brighton (Colo.) National Banks, both closed Jan. 22, 1965; the First National Bank of Marlin (Texas), closed March 10, 1964; and the Crown Savings Bank (Newport News, Va.), closed Sept. 4, 1964. Examination of factors contributing to the failure of these banks showed several examples of infiltration by criminal elements and irregularities that might have been checked had the Comptroller, the Federal Reserve and the FDIC been in closer cooperation. Evidence uncovered during the probe also led to federal indictment of officers of all four banks. The Brighton bank was the only one chartered by Saxon. The San Francisco and Marlin banks had been chartered prior to Saxon's appointment, and the Crown Savings Bank was a federally insured, state-chartered institution.

Legislative Proposals

President Johnson April 1 said at a news conference that the Congressional investigation had "raised a good many questions about the (national) banking system." Mr. Johnson added, "I would not be surprised if the Executive and Legislative Departments improve upon some of its regulatory functions."

On March 29, Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas), chairman of both the House Banking and Currency Committee and its Domestic Finance Subcommittee, introduced a bill (HR 6885) which sought to improve federal bank regulation by centering all regulatory functions in the Secretary of the Treasury. A similar bill (HR 107), introduced earlier in the session by Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.), second-ranking majority member of the full Committee, would have centered the regulatory functions in a new Federal Banking Commission. Both bills would have abolished the office of Comptroller of the Currency, but would have preserved unchanged the insurance functions of the FDIC and the monetary and credit policy-setting functions of the Federal Reserve. The House Banking and Currency Bank Supervision and Insurance Subcommittee held hearings on both measures in 1965, but took no further action. (See p. 848)

In addition, Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.), chairman of both the Senate Government Operations Committee and its Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, Sept. 29 introduced omnibus legislation (S 2575) covering violations of federal laws turned up during the Senate hearings. In its major provisions, S 2575 would have closed certain loopholes in existing law and tightened controls over the following areas: convicted criminals participating in bank management and ownership, falsification of bank documents, inflation of bank assets to obtain loans, granting of national bank charters, changes of ownership of bank stock, borrowing of money to organize a national bank, and the use of certificates of deposits (receipts on certain types of time deposits which often carry illegal interest rates in excess of those permitted by federal regulation).

S 2575 also would have directed the President to undertake a study to determine the need for reorganization of federal bank regulatory functions, required the appropriate federal agencies to conduct thorough investigations of all persons seeking bank charters, required public hearings on bank charter applications when requested, and provided for regular independent audits of federally insured banks. Hearings on S 2575 were not held in 1965, but Senate Banking and Currency Committee Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) Sept. 30 announced that they would be scheduled for early in 1966.

Bank Investigation

Senate Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Government Operations, Permanent Investigations Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- March 9-11, 16-18, 22 and 31; April 1-2; May 11-13; and Aug. 3 on a general investigation of the nation's federally insured banking system, including the purchase of banks by unscrupulous persons, depletion of bank assets, and a recent rise in bank failures. Highlights of testimony:

COMPTROLLER

March 9 -- Saxon defended his four-year-old bank-chartering policies. He testified that "gross misbehavior or gross dishonesty" rather than poor regulation contributed to recent national bank failures. He said that Congress might consider legislative measures to give the Comptroller greater authority to check the spread of criminal and other unsavory elements in the banking industry, but warned that some proposals for tightening federal control over banks would tend to "communize and socialize the banking industry and the whole economy." Saxon said that requiring prior approval of bank ownership changes, for example, would "entail a fundamental change in the relationship between the Government and the banking industry." As a compromise, Saxon announced that he would issue new regulations requiring public disclosure of changes in the "effective working" control of banks, as opposed to changes in ownership. (See below)

March 10 -- Saxon detailed for the Committee reasons for the failure of the San Francisco bank, the Brighton (Colo.) bank and the Marlin (Texas) bank. He noted that widespread illegal activities preceded the failure of all three banks. He said that criminal reports had been filed with the Justice Department in the three cases.

Highlights of Saxon's testimony:

● Saxon said that the San Francisco bank was "so murked down in just plain rotten corruption that there was simply no hope" for its survival. He said the bank's failure was due in part to the "improper and highly questionable, if not unlawful, banking practices" of its president, Don C. Silverthorne. Saxon testified that Silverthorne often extracted fees and commissions from borrowers and then used them "in part to pay borrowed money from the East and other places and partly to finance his gambling activities in the East." In addition, Saxon said the bank violated its legal lending limits, made illegal loans on real estate and issued an excessive number of certificates of deposits for which it paid more than the legal rate of interest.

● Saxon said the Brighton bank was "completely milked" of its assets. According to Deputy Comptroller James Watson, who accompanied Saxon, Denver businessman James W. Egan used stock of the bank as collateral for loans with which he bought control of the bank. Watson said also the use of fraudulent notes and counterfeit securities figured in manipulation of Brighton's assets. Saxon and Watson refrained from providing further details about the Brighton case, because, according to Saxon, the case involved "complex criminal matters," including "a member of Murder, Inc."

● In the Marlin bank case, Saxon said two Texas mortgage entrepreneurs acquired control of the bank through the use of two "straw" directors and a corporate front. Saxon said that one of the Texans, Bernard G. Garrett, had a "very unsavory record," including convictions for grand theft and forgery. The other was a Joseph E. Morris.

In concluding his testimony, Saxon elaborated on his new regulation, announced March 9 (see above), dealing with public disclosure of changes in bank control, and suggested two other possible new regulations. One, would give the FDIC authority, without waiting for state officials to act first, to close state-chartered banks. The other would limit the issuance of certificates of deposits, particularly by small banks.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Feb. 2 -- The United Auto Workers Union (UAW), which deposited $3 million in the San Francisco bank in 1964, reported that it received a $15,000 "bounty" for making the deposit.

Feb. 19 -- Saxon proclaimed a moratorium on new bank charters in 13 major metropolitan areas, including the District of Columbia. Saxon said that a "period of digestion is essential in order to provide a reasonable opportunity for recently formed banks to develop."

Feb. 26 -- Saxon's office released a report showing that between 1952 and 1964, 1,168 new state banks and 661 new national banks were chartered. Between 1952 and 1960, the number of new state-chartered banks exceeded the number of new national banks, but for the period 1963-64, 369 national banks were chartered while only 272 state banks were chartered.

FDIC

March 11 -- Joseph W. Barr, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), told the Subcommittee that 13 banks had failed since 1963, as compared with an average of only two or three a year in the 20 years prior to 1963. He said, however, that the total assets of these 13 banks amounted to only $113 million, which was "very small" in relation to the $366 billion in total assets of all insured banks. He emphasized that the banking industry as a whole was "healthy" but said that the recent high incidence of bank failures was "unusual" and "worthy of careful examination." (See box p. 1533)

Barr cited three factors common to many recent bank failures: "First of all, dishonest activities; second, acquisition of bad assets financed by high-cost funds not received in the usual course of business and carried as certificates of deposits; and third, sudden unsavory shifts in bank control which preceded the failure." As corrective measures, Barr said the FDIC was (1) bringing to the attention of the Justice Department "all possible violations of criminal law"; (2) asking the courts to determine whether the FDIC was liable to insure deposits carrying illegally high interest rates; and (3) filing suits to recover funds from persons who received excessive interest payments from the closed banks. Barr said his office and the Justice Department would probe the operations of "money brokers" who might be involved in purchasing banks and other financial institutions with underworld profits.

In addition, Barr confirmed testimony given March 10 by Saxon that the Marlin bank was "looted" before being ordered closed. Barr testified that the bank's owners invested in more than $900,000 worth of unsuitable mortgages. He said his office was able to sell these mortgages for only $500,000, and "I was glad to get that."

FEDERAL RESERVE

March 16 -- William McChesney Martin Jr., chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, testified that small banks were especially vulnerable to financial manipulators because of the small amount of capital needed to purchase such banks. He said, "Once control of one bank is obtained there is a danger that its funds may be used to finance purchases of control of other banks." Like other top banking officials, however, Martin indicated that there was no clear need for stricter federal legislation covering banking practices.

Martin did concede, however, that there could be greater cooperation between the three bank regulatory agencies -- the Federal Reserve, FDIC and Comptroller -- especially in the area of weeding unsavory persons out of the banking industry. Martin endorsed a suggestion by Subcommittee Republican Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) that the three agencies get together and form "a sort of clearing house arrangement so that the left hand would know what the right hand is doing."

Martin added that the Comptroller's office "should not have...withheld from the Federal Reserve System information which disclosed irregularities in the operations of the San Francisco bank." (See below)

Abram Merritt, vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, testified that he had no idea there was corruption in the San Francisco bank prior to lending it several million dollars shortly before it closed. Merritt told Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) that he did not see part of a "confidential" report, made by Saxon's office in May 1964, that showed irregularities in the San Francisco bank's operations. Merritt said the report would have been a "factor" in the Federal Reserve's decision to lend money to the bank.

Fred Soloman, chief examiner of the Federal Reserve Board, said the Board stopped getting requests for its advice on chartering new banks soon after Saxon took office in 1961. Consultation by the Comptroller with the Federal Reserve prior to chartering banks was not required by law, but had been a traditional practice.

Arnold E. Larsen, head of the Comptroller's office in San Francisco, in response to a question by McClellan, said information regarding corruption in the San Francisco bank was not submitted to the Federal Reserve in line with a long-standing policy that certain kinds of working information in the Comptroller's files was not passed on to other agencies in order to avoid harm to innocent parties. McClellan responded that he could not understand why one agency would not alert the other to such information. "I don't set the policy down here in Washington," Larsen replied, "but I would agree with you."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- March 16 -- Howard B. Crittenden, Silverthorne's lawyer, told reporters that the San Francisco bank president would answer all questions concerning his activities when he appeared before the Subcommittee. Crittenden said Silverthorne's testimony would include reference to the fact that he gave a $125 set of cuff links to Saxon. Silverthorne, Crittenden said, would testify that there was nothing wrong in extending such gifts.

March 17 -- In a prepared statement, Saxon said he did receive a set of cuff links from Silverthorne, but that they were immediately returned. "It has been my custom that when gifts are so proffered to me to make no immediately embarrassing scene but to return the gift as soon as possible," he said. "In this case the gifts which were proffered to me on Wednesday, Nov. 20, 1963, were returned on the succeeding Tuesday, Nov. 26, 1963. The delay was occasioned by the intervening assassination of President Kennedy."

SAN FRANCISCO BANK BACKGROUND

March 17 -- Victor E. Del Tredici, an examiner of the Comptroller of the Currency's office, testified on a June 1964 examination of the San Francisco bank. Del Tredici said the examination revealed that Silverthorne was diverting fees he charged borrowers to his personal account. On one occasion, Tredici said, Silverthorne split a $40,000 fee on a $240,000 bank loan with William S. Bennett, a California real estate operator. Tredici said he considered such a practice unlawful, and so informed Silverthorne. Silverthorne, Tredici added, replied that it "was his money. He had earned it."

Tredici told the Subcommittee he drafted a letter concerning the fee-splitting to the U.S. Attorney in San Francisco on June 22, 1964, but that it was never sent. Instead, he said, Arnold E. Larsen, head of the Comptroller's West Coast office, forwarded the letter to Saxon's office in Washington. The letter did not reach the Justice Department until Feb. 26, 1965, a month after Saxon had closed the bank.

Charles H. McEnerney, associate chief counsel to the Comptroller, testified that Saxon's office received the letter soon after it was forwarded by Larsen. Asked why Saxon did not forward the letter to the Justice Department, McEnerney said he did not know. He agreed, however, that it was Saxon's responsibility.

Questioned again by the Subcommittee, Larsen said the San Francisco bank was allowed to remain open following Tredici's examination because it was "poor, not insolvent." He said Silverthorne was "well known," the bank was known as "his bank," and "there was always a risk of a run on the bank" if he were deposed.

Under questioning by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), Larsen said Silverthorne ignored warnings from Saxon and the bank's directors to stop illegal loan operations. Larsen added, however, that the bank's ratio of loans to deposits, which had risen to 97 percent in December 1964, was the result of declining deposits rather than increasing loans.

Larsen also testified that he had advised Silverthorne not to approve a $625,000 loan to Morris and Garrett, organizers of the Marlin (Texas) bank because the indebtedness of these borrowers was more than 10 percent of the San Francisco bank's capital at the time. Nevertheless, the loan was made.

March 18 -- Morley Turner, a Redwood City, Calif., real estate man, alleged to the Subcommittee that Silverthorne had cheated him of $300,000 in "nightmare" dealings since 1962. Turner testified that Silverthorne forced him to pay fees on loans, purchased jewelry from Turner's personal account and required him to rent space in one of his office buildings that he did not need or want. Turner said his account was often charged amounts ranging from $8,000 to $20,000 a month for reasons he was not aware of.

Asked by Sen. Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) if Silverthorne "ever threatened to ruin you financially if you didn't continue to play ball," Turner replied, "Yes." He added: "Anyway real estate men don't sue money lenders or they get no further credit from other lenders."

William S. Bennett, who was alleged to have split fees on loans with Silverthorne (see above), declared he had "reason to believe" he was a defendant in legal proceedings and invoked the 5th Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

March 22 -- Donald O'Donnell, a Subcommittee counsel, testified that records of Las Vegas gambling casinos showed Silverthorne to have cashed checks or drawn money totaling $906,246 during the period from July 1963 to early 1965. O'Donnell said Silverthorne still owed the casinos $227,250. The money, the Subcommittee counsel concluded, was either "lost on gaming tables or pocketed by Silverthorne."

Silverthorne Testimony

March 22 -- In a prepared statement, Silverthorne said that he came to Washington "to expose the destruction of the San Francisco National Bank and to defend myself from the vicious and unfounded attempt at character assassination by the Comptroller of the Currency and his San Francisco regional deputy." The statement covered the following major points:

- Other banks "did not take kindly" to competition created by his bank. "This is the real reason for the closing of the San Francisco National Bank."
- Deposits in his personal account of "all payments from my services to customers" was required "upon the direction of the Comptroller's Office."
- Increased classification of the bank's loans as "special mention loans" (loans which required close attention) was "deliberate, unwarranted and made for ulterior motives."
- Following his removal as president, the bank was run by the Comptroller, whose regional deputy (Larsen) "became a daily drinking companion" of the bank's board chairman.
- Had the bank been in as bad condition as the Comptroller said, the Comptroller, after assuming its operations, would not have opened a new branch.
- At 1:30 p.m. on Jan. 22, Larsen assured a loan broker his client could safely deposit $10 million in the bank; at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 22, Saxon closed the bank. "Why did the Comptroller leave this bank open to take deposits if he knew of its insolvency or even questioned the bank's solvency?...There is no other conclusion than that the (bank) was destroyed by the Comptroller, acting in the interest of restraint of competition.... Accepting deposits, knowing the bank was insolvent, is a criminal offense and the Comptroller must answer for this."

Under questioning by the Subcommittee, Silverthorne denied all allegations made against him during Subcommittee hearings. On numerous questions respecting his loan dealings, however, Silverthorne replied "I don't know" or "I don't remember." He said Subcommittee figures showing money he had drawn from Las Vegas gambling casinos "are not true" and that money from the bank given by him to Bennett was to enable Bennett to repay a debt to him.

March 31 -- Silverthorne testified again, covering the following new, major points:

- Silverthorne said he made an unsecured loan of $625,000 to Morris and Garrett to purchase the Mainland Bank and Trust Co. in Texas City, Texas. Further testimony revealed that to obtain the loan, Morris and Garrett paid Silverthorne a fee of $50,000.

Silverthorne added that after he made the loan he was informed by the Texas State Superintendent of Banks that the Mainland bank might have to be closed because it had made bad loans totaling $700,000. As a result, Silverthorne said that the Mainland bank was sold to a group of investors headed by Robert G. Florence Jr. and revived; that $200,000 worth of its bad loans were turned over to the San Francisco National Bank as security for that bank's loan to Morris and Garrett; and that he (Silverthorne) had obtained liens on 25 to 30 pieces of property owned by Morris and Garrett and valued at about $3 million as further security for his loan to them.

In addition Silverthorne testified that he placed half of the $50,000 fee paid by Morris and Garrett in his personal account and half in the bank's account. Reminded by McClellan that he had testified earlier that the Comptroller had instructed him to put all such fees in his personal account, Silverthorne lost his temper and complained, "I've been here and I've been pushed around...you can't confuse me." McClellan answered that he was not trying to confuse him, but warned: "You're going to show respect for this Committee." Silverthorne retorted: "Don't yell at me, I'll yell back."

- Silverthorne revealed that he served as cochairman of the finance committee for the "I guess, Johnson for President Committee" in the San Francisco Bay area in 1964. Sen. Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) asked, "You guess... was it Goldwater?" Silverthorne replied, "No, no...not Goldwater."
- Asked by Curtis to comment on Saxon's charge that the San Francisco National Bank was "so murked in plain rot and corruption, there just was no hope," Silverthorne said, "No, it's not true...I can say the same thing about the Comptroller's department and double spades... he's talking out of his head."
- Silverthorne testified that he was "confident there was some kind of payoff somewhere along the line" when the Lytton Savings and Loan Assn. of Los Angeles was allowed to withdraw a $1.5 million deposit from the San Francisco bank just hours before it was closed Jan. 22. Silverthorne stated that the normal procedure is for a depositor holding a certificate of deposit to give 30 days notice before allowing the certificate to expire. He said Lytton was permitted to allow its certificate to expire with seven days' notice. "I am charging skullduggery," Silverthorne said. "I am saying Lytton was given preferred status among the bank's creditors. I state and charge that there has to be something wrong."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- April 5 -- Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.), in a radio interview, called Saxon a "stupid, inefficient Comptroller of the Currency." Scott said Saxon's "chief reason for being in office seems to be to set up banks to benefit Democratic politicians." He said, "I would think the early removal of Mr. Saxon would be beneficial to the financial administration of our banking system."

A spokesman for Saxon April 5 replied to the charges by demanding that Scott prove political influence was involved in the chartering of any national bank. "It has been the settled policy of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency during the past three and one-half years to consider political efforts to influence decisions as a negative factor warranting rejection of the case. In no instance has there been any exception to this policy. If Sen. Scott believes he has any information to the contrary he has the obligation to reveal it publicly," the spokesman said.

April 11 -- The Independent Bankers Assn., meeting for its 31st annual convention in Hollywood, Fla., called for the removal of Saxon. The Association, which represented 6,300 small and medium-sized banks, said that Saxon's policies "appear to foster a central banking system." They added that Saxon had shown "an outright contempt for state banking laws."

Sept. 8 -- A federal grand jury in San Francisco indicted Silverthorne and William S. Bennett, a business associate, for misapplication of more than $1 million of bank funds, falsifying bank records and splitting fees on bank loans. The indictments contained more than 76 counts against the two.

MARLIN BANK BACKGROUND

March 31 -- B.L. Anderson, a bank broker from Houston, Texas, testified that he arranged the sale of the Mainland and Marlin banks to groups including Morris and Garrett. He said the price of the Mainland bank was $657,000 and the Marlin bank, $275,000. His fees, he added, were $15,000 for Mainland and $13,500 for Marlin.

April 1 -- William B. Camp, first deputy Comptroller of the Currency, and Norman R. Dunn, head of the Comptroller's Dallas, Texas, office, testified that Morris and Garrett, who had a criminal record dating back to the 1930s, bought control of the Marlin bank and then flooded it with $970,000 in substandard notes and mortgages.

Dunn told the Subcommittee that Morris and Garrett bought the Marlin bank in 1963 using a "front" to shield actual ownership. The "front," he said, was Matthew D. Steiner, currently a Salinas, Calif., bartender. Subsequent to acquiring the bank, Dunn explained, Morris and Garrett bought 101 substandard notes and mortgages at a discount and then ordered Steiner, who was chairman of the board of the Marlin bank, to purchase them for $970,000. A $180,000 profit on the exchange, Dunn said, went to Morris and Garrett.

Steiner told the Subcommittee he was only "a front man" or "straw man," and swore he had received "not a dime" in the mortgage deal.

In a prepared statement, Garrett said Steiner was the instigator of the mortgage deal and had received "a $7,500 kickback."

April 2 -- Garrett said Steiner and Silverthorne had done "dirt" to Morris and him. He said Steiner had cost the two nearly "$1 million" by investing in bad loans and mortgages. Garrett added that he and Morris merely bought the Marlin and Mainland banks through Steiner in order to conceal the fact they were Negroes. He said his only desire was "to give relief to local colored people who were having great difficulty obtaining real estate loans."

With reference to Silverthorne, Garrett said he and Morris had sought a $250,000 loan from him when it became apparent the Marlin bank was in financial trouble. He said Silverthorne promised to forward the money to them but never did. "Mr. Silverthorne was integrated," Garrett said. "He'd taken me along with everybody else."

Morris testified that a "rigid attitude of racial apprehension" by federal and state banking officials contributed to the downfall of the Marlin bank. He said he had been advised by the officials to operate in the shadows when he sought financial interests in Texas. "The necessity of operating in the shadow remotely to avoid racial confusion required great reliance on intermediaries and the existing bank management," he said.

Following the conflicting testimony of Silverthorne, federal officials, Morris and Garrett, McClellan concluded that the record "is bulging with perjury." He said he would turn the testimony over to the Justice Department. "I can't say who is guilty," McClellan said. "The conflict is so shocking and -- it is apparent that somebody is lying." He added: "We have listened to willful statements that are false. These statements are pertinent to this inquiry."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- April 7 -- A federal grand jury in El Paso, Texas, returned a two-count felony indictment against Garrett and Morris, charging them with defrauding the Marlin bank of nearly $190,000. The first count charged them with defrauding the bank by misapplication of funds in violation of federal law. The second count charged them with conspiracy to misapply funds. Steiner was named as a co-conspirator, but not as a co-defendant.

BRIGHTON BANK BACKGROUND

May 11 -- First Deputy Comptroller of the Currency Camp told the Subcommittee that the Brighton (Colo.) bank was closed after certain bank officers attempted to unload approximately $1.3 million in counterfeit securities and forged notes on the Miami, Fla., National Bank in 1964. Brighton had accepted the securities and notes as collateral for loans. Camp said Hugh Best, president of the bank, and James W. Egan, the bank's principal stockholder, had then sought to use them as collateral for a loan from the Miami bank. Camp said he believed Best and Egan had knowledge that the securities and notes were fraudulent.

May 12 -- Richard M. Horton, a former convict, testified that he had once introduced Egan to Edward Scott Flohr, in whose home California police allegedly found evidence linking Flohr to the counterfeit securities in the Brighton bank.

Best told the Subcommittee that Horton had brought the false securities, signed by eight California doctors, to the Brighton bank, and that Egan had granted loans on the basis of the physicians' "very impressive" financial statements.

Egan refused to testify, invoking the 5th Amendment.

Aug. 3 -- Former Colorado Gov. Stephen L.R. McNichols (D 1957-63) told the Subcommittee that testimony given earlier by Egan in closed session intimating McNichols' friendship with underworld characters was "absolutely false." McNichols said that Egan's testimony was a "deliberate" attempt to smear him because he and members of his law firm "have been giving evidence of possible criminal violation to governmental agencies which directly involve Egan and his associates." McNichols was formerly director and currently president of Denver's 17th Street National Bank, from which the Brighton bank had borrowed heavily.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- July 20-22 -- The Subcommittee held hearings on a charge that 12 union officials from the New York Allied Trades Council and from New York Local 815 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters had diverted $3.6 million from union pension funds and assigned the money to two overseas foundations headed by the former principal officer of both unions. The union officials and head of the foundations refused to testify concerning the alleged diversion invoking the 5th Amendment.

Aug. 5 -- A federal grand jury in Denver indicted Horton, Best and Egan in connection with a scheme to use counterfeit securities and forged notes to misapply $596,000 of bank funds. Horton was indicted on three counts of transporting fake securities. Best and Egan were indicted on seven counts of misapplying funds and on two counts of making false entries in bank records. All three were indicted on a conspiracy count.

House Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Domestic Finance Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- July 20-23, 27-30 and Aug. 2-6 on a general investigation of the nation's federally insured banking system similar to that conducted by the Senate Subcommittee. The House Subcommittee's probe centered on the reasons for the 1964 failure of the Crown Savings Bank of Newport News, Va. Highlights:

July 20 -- According to Rep. Richard T. Hanna (D Calif.), the Crown Savings Bank's failure resulted from bad loan transactions negotiated by LeRoy F. Ridley, the bank's president, with persons who had "a criminal record or criminal tendencies." It was alleged later that among the bad transactions were loans used to finance, directly and indirectly, money broker operations in New York, Virginia and Georgia, loans to money order companies controlled by criminal elements and loans based on forged collateral. The losses from such transactions were estimated at as much as $3.5 million.

Ridley testified, denying any complicity and stating, "I have never executed or knowingly permitted any fraudulent or dishonest transaction."

July 27 -- The Subcommittee asked Andrew Goldberg of Norfolk, Va., who borrowed large sums from Crown, whether money he and associates borrowed was used to finance ventures with which Cosa Nostra (Mafia) figures were connected. Many of the loans were defaulted. Goldberg refused to answer, invoking the 5th Amendment and also the 4th Amendment, which protects against unreasonable search and seizures. Goldberg in June had pleaded guilty to an extortion charge in Norfolk, and was currently under indictment for grand larceny. Both cases arose out of loans made by Crown to him and his associates.

Aug. 3. -- FDIC Chairman Kenneth A. Randall proposed to provide financial penalties for violation of federal regulations prescribing the maximum rate of interest which insured banks may pay on deposits. Randall said the Bureau of the Budget had advised him that enactment of such legislation "would be consistent with the Administration's objectives." His proposal would prohibit any of the FDIC-insured banks and their officers, directors, agents and substantial stockholders from paying, or agreeing to pay, any person for obtaining a deposit. Only FDIC or Federal Reserve regulations could allow exceptions. The same prohibition applied to "any other person" whose payments to induce deposits were known to a bank "or reasonably should have" been known. Financial penalties of up to 10 percent of the amount of the deposit would be levied against bank violators.

Randall said the FDIC had under consideration "other remedial measures" that would do the following:

- Empower federal banking agencies to order supervised banks to cease and desist from unsound practices and from violations of law or regulations.
- Suspend or remove bank officers and directors who engage in such practices or violations.
- Seek criminal penalties against borrowers who knowingly make false statements to insured banks.
- Increase FDIC's authority to extend financial aid to insured banks in difficulties.
- Authorize banking agencies to require all banks to obtain independent private audits of their books and affairs.

In answer to a suggestion of Subcommittee Chairman Wright Patman (D Texas) that the FDIC had a deal for information with Peter D'Agostino, who was implicated with Ridley in the collapse of the Crown Savings Bank and who had been linked by the Subcommittee with the Cosa Nostra crime syndicate, Randall said the FDIC had, in accordance with standard practice, agreed not to question D'Agostino about one of his ventures without his lawyer being present. Randall also contended that the whole matter was academic "to a degree," since at the time of the meeting at which the alleged deal was made most of the information needed had already been obtained.

Queried by Rep. William B. Widnall (R N.J.) whether the proposed legislation would "stop what took place at Crown," Randall replied that no legislation could entirely stop thievery, but the measure would give supervisory authorities "a significant tool to hold that type of activity to a minimum."

Aug. 5 -- In answer to charges by Rep. Compton I. White Jr. (D Idaho) that the FDIC in the Crown Savings Bank case had ignored "its responsibility to see that all activities were in accord with sound and prudent banking principles," Randall conceded the FDIC was "not without error but we try to learn from the mistakes that are made." Although granting that the FDIC's performance was not perfect, Randall said it had "a fine record." However, he explained, under existing law the primary supervisory authority rests with the state agencies and with the Comptroller of the Currency, not with the FDIC. Nevertheless, in the Crown Savings Bank case, Randall said, the FDIC should have been on the case "faster and sooner."

Aug. 6 -- Patman criticized FDIC examiners for not knowing "in 1963 or at the latest in early 1964 that the Crown Savings Bank was in serious difficulty." Patman said that action at that time "could at least have minimized the losses...and prevented further looting," and "probably would have saved half a million dollars or more."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Jan. 31, 1966 -- A federal grand jury in Atlanta, Ga., indicted Ridley and several of his associates on 18 counts of mail fraud and one count of conspiracy in connection with their money order transactions.

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT

The Subcommittee Feb. 21, 1966, released a report entitled "Investigation into Crown Savings Bank Failure." The report said the Subcommittee's investigation disclosed the following principal areas of concern in the operation of the nation's banking industry: "(a) the operations of loan brokers and loan sharks and their relationship to the commercial banking field; (b) financial aid and other assistance provided by banks to illegal and other questionable activities, and to people with criminal records; (c) the operation of money brokers in the marketing of negotiable certificates of deposit by commercial banks; and (d) the effectiveness of the present system of bank supervision and examination as it exists in the United States today."

The report noted that while these four activities played a "substantial part" in the failure of the Crown Savings Bank, they were "by no means unique" to this particular bank. "These activities go on every day on a large scale throughout the entire banking system," the report added, but they were "more extreme" in the Crown Savings Bank case. The report also said the Subcommittee concluded that the best way to check illegal banking operations was through "much closer coordination between the various elements of bank supervision and law enforcement." Since the current system of supervising banks was "complex," the report said the "simplest, most logical, and most practical solution is to consolidate the federal bank supervisory and examination functions in one agency."

Loan Company Investigation

COMMITTEE -- House Banking and Currency, Domestic Finance Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- June 9, 16-18 on an investigation of the Federal Services Financial Corp., a loan company which dealt mainly in automobile loans to enlisted personnel in the armed services. It did much of its business at military bases in the United States and overseas. Committee Chairman Wright Patman (D Texas) April 27 wrote to Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara, asking for an investigation of complaints against the company. Patman June 8 announced that "preliminary reports" from McNamara's office indicated that there were "a large number of instances involving...exorbitant interest rates, unethical, even illegal dealings, and improper handling of insurance" by the company in dealings with servicemen. Federal Services was reported to be under investigation by the Federal Trade Commission and the Internal Revenue Service, as well as by the Defense Department and the House Subcommittee.

TESTIMONY -- June 9 -- In an opening statement, Patman said that "serious questions" had been raised about Federal Services' practices and policies since 1953 and that complaints concerning the organization "range from Federal Services representing itself as an affiliate of the Federal Government to interest rate charges that amounted to almost 100 percent over a two-year period."

Duane J. Sorenson, a former employee of Federal Services, charged that the firm used "abusive and devious practices," including charging for insurance which was duplicated by the Government, receiving "kickbacks" from dealings with other companies and requiring loan applicants to grant Federal Services power of attorney. Sorenson said many U.S. firms would no longer deal with Federal Services; that employees of the firm were instructed to back down if a legal officer entered a case; that repossessed cars were sold at low prices to Wheels, Inc., which Federal Services owned; that a delinquent client was often "pressured" through his commanding officer; and that some collections made through the military were greater than the amount the applicant owed. He also accused the firm of using "big names to cover up the type of abusive operation they run." Former Chief of Naval Operations, Adm. Arleigh Burke, was a director and Ward W. Dworshak, son of former Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho), was executive vice president of the firm.

June 16 -- Clayton Norris, president of Federal Services, called Sorenson "a dissident former employee" and questioned his knowledge of the firm's operations. He said that the Better Business Bureau had received only 54 complaints on the firm since 1942.

Burke, one of eight high-ranking retired officers serving on the company's 12-man board, said he was sure Federal Services was "a good company."

June 17 -- Norman S. Paul, Assistant Secretary of Defense, said a special interservice group in the Department was working on "ways to protect the serviceman from being subjected to sharp practices." He said the group might require firms dealing with servicemen to make a clear disclosure of interest and costs, use standard forms and charge no penalties for prepayments.

Rep. Frank Annunzio (D Ill.) suggested that servicemen should be forbidden to do business with Federal Services while it was under investigation. Paul said the Department did not rule out the possibility of declaring "off limits" any firm which victimized servicemen, but he said such a ban would be difficult to enforce because many of the bigger firms did business by mail.

June 18 -- Secretary of the Army Stephen Ailes was called to testify concerning stock which he held in Federal Services. Ailes said that he had purchased the stock for his children with money they had inherited, acting on the advice of a broker who was his uncle. This took place Feb. 28, 1956. At the time he bought 200 shares for $3,150.00. Ailes said dividends and stock splits had brought the total to 576 shares. Except for the initial purchase, Ailes said, "I have had no connection with the company in any manner whatsoever." Ailes was named Under Secretary of the Army in 1961 and Secretary of the Army in 1964. During Senate hearings on his confirmation for both offices, he said, he submitted a list of his holdings and his family's, including the stock in Federal Services.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 17 -- President Johnson announced that Ailes would retire July 1 as Secretary of the Army and would be replaced by Stanley R. Resor, currently Under Secretary of the Army. Subcommittee members June 18 assured Ailes that they saw no connection between his retirement and their interest in his control of stock of Federal Services.

Sept. 9 -- Deputy Defense Secretary Cyrus R. Vance issued a directive ordering that each military installation in the United States, District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Panama Canal Zone provide, where possible, free accommodations for one credit union to encourage "reasonable rates of interest" and to combat "usury or the patronage of lenders."

DEMOCRATS, REPUBLICANS DISAGREE ON ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

The progress and future of the economy were depicted in varying ways in 1965 by the President and Members of Congress. In his Economic Report, transmitted to Congress Jan. 28, President Johnson projected an "uninterrupted and vigorous expansion." In views expressed later, many Republicans took exception to Mr. Johnson's projections and his means of achieving them.

The report reflected the "new economic policy" adopted during the Kennedy Administration, which abandoned the priority of budget balancing and debt reduction in favor of measures to reduce the gap between actual and potential output, regardless of governmental deficits. The President's fiscal 1966 Budget proposed increased spending, lower taxes, and a large deficit.

The President estimated that gross national product (GNP) would reach $660 billion for the year -- an increase of $37.7 billion over that of 1964. Unemployment "should average less than the 5.2 percent of 1964," he said; the accompanying report of the Council of Economic Advisers (CEA) said it was not likely to fall significantly below 5.0 percent, however. (For text of message, see p. 1359)

These prospects were conditioned upon approval of the President's fiscal program as set forth in his Budget Message of Jan. 25. Legislative proposals therein that bore most directly on the President's economic forecast were those calling for a $1.75-billion cut in excise taxes and a 7-percent increase in Social Security payments retroactive to Jan. 1. Aside from repeating these, the President made only general references to new legislation.

Other key ingredients noted by the President included increased private spending generated by the second stage of the 1964 tax cut, which took effect in January, and voluntary business-labor adherence to the wage-price guideposts established by the CEA in 1962. The President underscored the need for wage-price stability in view of the nation's continuing balance-of-payments problems.

During the year, due to such forces as a broader excise cut and rising outlays for the Viet Nam war, the economic picture continued to change. (For details, see story p. 84)

Committee Hearings

The Joint Economic Committee held hearings Feb. 19, 22-27 on the 1965 Economic Report of the President.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 19 -- CEA Chairman Gardner Ackley said the Administration and the Federal Reserve Board (FRB) had rejected a tightening of domestic credit as a curb against capital outflows, preferring efforts by the FRB to persuade banks voluntarily to limit their lending to foreigners.

He indicated that expansion of the economy to full capacity had been precluded by unused plant capacity and idle labor. Despite the projected expansion in gross national product in 1965, he said, unemployment would "remain too high."

Feb. 22 -- Treasury Secretary Douglas Dillon said the anticipated deflationary effect of higher income tax payments in the spring of 1965 due to underwithholding in 1964 had been "highly exaggerated." Because many taxpayers had anticipated the problem and increased amounts withheld, he said, the Treasury collected $700 million more in withholding on 1964 incomes than had been expected. He added that the remaining additional tax liabilities and reductions in normal tax refunds would not comprise a "major impediment" to the economy or to the taxpayers.

Feb. 23 -- Budget Director Kermit Gordon said the fiscal 1966 Budget would inject a net stimulus of about $2 billion in calendar 1965. He also revealed that a federal-state revenue-sharing plan proposed by Walter W. Heller, former chairman of the CEA, was "still under consideration." (1964 Almanac p. 149)

Feb. 24 -- John Kenneth Galbraith, Harvard University economics professor, supported the general Administration policy but criticized continued tax reductions if used as "a substitute for increased outlays on urgent social needs."

Feb. 25 -- Raymond J. Saulnier, economics professor at Barnard College and chairman of the CEA under President Eisenhower, urged the Administration to tighten credit and raise interest rates. "If monetary policy is to be fully effective in helping our balance-of-payments solution," he said, "it must narrow the gap between the relatively low borrowing costs in our economy and the relatively high interest rates elsewhere."

Feb. 26 -- William McChesney Martin Jr., chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, called for stern restrictive measures, including a "less expansive overall credit policy," if the largely voluntary program to reduce the balance-of-payments deficit failed.

Feb. 27 -- Economist Leon Keyserling, CEA chairman in the Truman Administration, said the policies of the present Council tended to redistribute income in a "regressive direction," adding most to the incomes "of those who need help least." "About half" of the funds freed to the public by the tax cuts of 1962 and 1964 increased capital for investment, he said, and thus part of the effect had been "wasted" and had served to aggravate the balance-of-payments problem. He said much more could have been done to reduce unemployment if half the cuts had been channeled into increased public outlays to enlarge production in areas where gains would offset labor displacements resulting from automation.

Committee Report

The Joint Economic Committee March 17 filed its report (H Rept 175) on the 1965 Economic Report.

Majority Views. The Democratic majority praised the results of the 1964 income tax cut and in general endorsed the Administration's economic program. However, they cautioned that demand might be too small, rather than too great, and made recommendations aimed at providing more stimulus to the economy than recommended by the President. They called for larger excise tax cuts than those proposed by the President and for consideration of other tax cuts. They also warned that the proposed Social Security tax increases could have a restrictive effect on the economy. Other majority views:

- The economic records of the last four years showed "clearly" that federal fiscal policy could be used to expand the nation's economy.
- Solving the balance-of-payments deficit "must now be the nation's business of highest priority in international economic affairs." The majority voiced support for the President's moves to cut the deficit but asked that "our monetary authorities refrain at this time from any further tightening of credit." Military spending in European countries should be reduced and "ways must be found to curtail dollar expenditures in France." Steps also should be taken to provide "a stronger international monetary system -- a system which relies less on the dollar and the pound and more on the credit of other countries."

● The Committee said progress in expanding trade was "inadequate" and expressed concern over the European Economic Community's "highly protectionist" agricultural policy and "excessive" list of items to be excluded from the "Kennedy Round" of tariff-cutting negotiations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The report indicated that the United States should threaten the Common Market with retaliatory steps if the bloc did not negotiate in good faith for freer trade.

● The majority endorsed the President's efforts to stabilize wages and prices, saying that increased wages and prices were "shortsighted" and would "feed the inflationary cycle."

● The majority criticized the President for not including in his Economic Report "a well-organized, comprehensive and reasonably detailed list of legislative proposals designed to achieve the broad goals outlined."

Minority Views. The Committee's six Republican members, in "independent views," said the President's Economic Report was "long on optimism and self-praise" but "short on recognition, analysis and proposed solutions to a number of towering economic problems which could tumble our domestic economy like a house of cards." The Republicans said that "an inflationary overheating of the economy in 1965 can not be ruled out." Other minority views:

● The minority criticized the Administration's "expansionary fiscal policies" and said the Economic Report led the noninformed reader "into thinking that budget deficits are a necessary condition for demand-stimulating action." Studies were needed to determine the success of the 1964 tax cut and "the extent to which federal expenditures...should be manipulated to stabilize" the economy.

● The minority held that Administration efforts to control U.S. loans and investments abroad were wrong because they tended to work against the forces of the market. The Government should take steps to induce U.S. capital to remain in this country and foreign capital to come in, through measures such as tax cuts and higher interest rates which would attract investments, they said. The Republicans called for a "well-planned" international conference to seek a solution to the weaknesses of the world monetary system. "Because liquidity for the existing system is largely supplied by U.S. balance-of-payments deficits, the system could break down when the United States finally eliminates its chronic deficit."

● The minority said future efforts to solve unemployment and the problems of technological change must come mainly from the state and local governments and private business, rather than from "expansionary fiscal and monetary policies," which would lead to "serious inflationary pressures." The minority said that federal minimum wage laws priced some untrained persons out of a job and increasing costs of fringe benefits and related expenses such as the Social Security tax acted as a barrier to employment and hastened the installation of labor-saving machinery. The minority suggested that a plan to pay less than the minimum wage to workers unable to find employment otherwise, supplemented by a Government payment to such employees, "deserves careful study." Tax benefits should be given to businesses and individuals to encourage vocational training. Business and labor should be encouraged to develop procedures for transferring pensions and other benefits when workers change jobs.

● The Republicans opposed "excessive Government centralization" to solve problems in housing, education, transportation and health and supported "the federal system of shared sovereignty" with state and local governments. The Republicans indicated support for a proposal that a portion of federal revenue be returned to the states. The Republicans called for tax credits and other steps to encourage more research and development, a commission to study the impact of antitrust laws on U.S. productivity and a study to develop legislation to deal with national emergency strikes. They said farm programs should be aimed at a market economy for agriculture.

Supplementary Views. Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas), Committee chairman, said "the most important economic and governmental problem facing the nation today is the need for immediate rehabilitation of the Federal Reserve System, so that it is again subject to the will of the people." He complained that the FRS was dominated by bankers "who live on debt," and subject to little legislative and executive control.

Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) said the 1964 tax cut had not had time to prove itself "an outstanding success" as claimed in the majority views.

Sen. Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.) said U.S. allies should be called on to help pay the cost of U.S. military obligations abroad and that U.S. farm controls should be based on pounds, bushels, bales and other marketing controls, instead of on acreage.

Additional Views. Rep. Robert F. Ellsworth (R Kan.) urged the President "to press hard" for access to the Common Market for U.S. farm products.

Future Fiscal Policy

The Joint Economic Subcommittee on Fiscal Policy held hearings July 20-22 on U.S. fiscal policy issues for the next decade.

Ackley July 20 and Under Secretary of the Treasury Joseph W. Barr July 21 indicated that the costs of the Viet Nam war would determine whether taxes were reduced or increased in fiscal 1967. Both said that if the level of defense expenditures permitted a normal tax reduction, the cut proposed by the Administration would emphasize relief in the low- and middle-income brackets. They pointed out that the value of the $600 personal income tax deduction allowed each taxpayer and his dependents had been eroded by inflation and the general growth of real income, thus raising the burden of low-income taxation. In addition, they said, the projected increases in Social Security payroll taxes would raise this burden further.

Turning to the long-run economic outlook, Ackley said the CEA predicted an economic growth rate of 4 percent for the remainder of the 1960s, culminating in a GNP of about $895 billion in 1970. He said current tax rates would produce about $170 billion in revenues by 1970, almost $50 billion more than expected in fiscal 1966. To avoid recession, Ackley said, it would be necessary to put these revenues back into the economy either through increased spending or further tax reduction.

CONGRESS SEEKS TO CUT FEDERAL PAPERWORK

Both Congress and the Executive Branch in 1964 and 1965 sought ways to reduce the paperwork requirements of the Federal Government. Actions ranged from a moratorium on purchases of new filing cabinets, declared by President Johnson, to a Congressional committee report on the "Federal Paperwork Jungle" and enactment of a bill eliminating a number of obsolete federal reporting requirements.

President Johnson in March 1964 inaugurated a war on federal paperwork and reporting requirements as an economy measure. The White House Feb. 8, 1965, announced that by the end of 1964, the public was required to make 3.9 million fewer responses to federal questionnaires than had been required when the war was initiated. It said that 5.2 million questionnaire-responses had been eliminated and 1.3 million added during that period.

Following are details of steps taken in 1965:

FILING CABINET MORATORIUM. President Johnson Jan. 13 declared a 90-day moratorium on the purchase of new filing cabinets by federal agencies and directed the agencies to make "greater utilization" of the General Services Administration's program of repairing and rehabilitating existing furniture and equipment. In a related development, the National Stationery and Office Equipment Assn., in a Feb. 20 letter to the President, urged that all agencies determine how "new and modern equipment" could make record-keeping more efficient. It suggested that April (when the moratorium was to end) be designated as "Better Record Keeping Month." The designation was not made.

"PAPERWORK JUNGLE." The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee Feb. 18 issued a 200-page report (H Rept 52) entitled "The Federal Paperwork Jungle -- A Report on the Paperwork Requirements Placed Upon Business, Industry and the Public by the Federal Departments and Agencies." The report, described as a "brief review," was compiled by the Subcommittee on Census and Government Statistics. It found that:

- The cost to the Government of its own paperwork in 1964 was $6 billion to $7 billion. Federal agencies currently required over 1 billion reports annually -- "five for every person in the United States."
- It cost industry, business and the public about $20 billion a year to process Government reports.
- The Government Printing Office printed over two billion forms a year for federal agencies, or "12 for every person in the United States."
- Storage of Government records occupied 24.5 million cubic feet, or "somewhat over 4 million file cabinets and...40 billion pieces of paper."
- Less than 30 percent of federal reports and forms are reviewed by the Budget Bureau despite provisions of the 1942 Federal Reports Act (5 USC 139) requiring the Bureau to oversee and coordinate the information collecting procedures of most federal agencies.
- The 3,803 federal reports approved under the 1942 Act provisions (excluding Internal Revenue Service reports, not covered in the Act) required an estimated 182,105,325 annual responses. (The report contained a 78-page list of these reports.)
- The Internal Revenue Service estimated that in 1964 it received 317,800,000 responses to requests for information. (The Committee report complained that the IRS had failed to submit a requested report on the estimated cost of these reporting activities.)

Recommendations. The Committee recommended that Congress: consider establishing a Joint Committee on Federal Reports; require agencies to submit specific budget requests for reporting projects; and enact legislation to "plug loopholes" in the 1942 Act. It suggested that procedures of the Budget Bureau and all agencies should assure that all reports undertaken are necessary; the Bureau's Advisory Council on Federal Reports should be fully utilized; the President should create a Council on Federal-State Reports and a Small Business Advisory Council to report on reporting requirements in their fields; the Budget Bureau should be reorganized to facilitate implementation of its reporting functions; and the federal budget should include an analysis of estimated costs of all major federal reporting systems, whether covered under the 1942 Act or not. The Committee also recommended steps to be taken by specific agencies to reduce paperwork.

LEGISLATION ENACTED. The President Nov. 8 signed an amended Administration bill (S 2150 -- PL 89-348) eliminating 23 outdated requirements for reports by federal agencies and requiring less frequent submissions (annual instead of quarterly or semiannual, in most cases) of 22 other reports. Most of the reports covered had been required by Congress or Congressional committees.

The Budget Bureau May 5 had submitted a draft bill eliminating 65 reporting requirements and modifying nine others. It estimated the annual savings at $100,000. The Bureau said that since the President's 1964 directive for elimination of unnecessary publications and reports, 521 existing publications had been abolished and proposals for 133 new ones had been withdrawn or disapproved. The savings, it said, totaled nearly $3 million. The Bureau suggested that "action by the Congress to eliminate or modify statutory reports that have outlived their usefulness would be a logical and highly desirable counterpart to the administrative actions to eliminate unnecessary reports...."

The Senate Government Operations Committee, which considered the bill first, submitted it to all chairmen of Senate committees. On the recommendation of the chairmen, the Committee retained 20 of the reports proposed for elimination, thus removing only 45, and added provisions requiring less frequent submission of 11 others. S 2150 was reported Aug. 10 (S Rept 545) and passed by the Senate Aug. 12 by voice vote.

The House Government Operations Committee, following a similar procedure, accepted recommendations of House committee chairmen and ranking members to retain 22 additional reports and to change the frequency of submission of two more. The result was a bill eliminating 23 reports and changing submission requirements on 22 others. The Committee reported the bill Oct. 15 (H Rept 1169), and the House passed it by voice vote Oct. 18. The Senate Oct. 21 agreed to the House amendments by voice vote, clearing the bill for the President.

WASTE TRIMMING AWARDS. The Administrative Management Society, a private professional organization, in October presented Federal Government Paperwork Management Awards to 22 federal employees for producing savings in federal paperwork amounting to $100 million since the war on paperwork was initiated.

OCEAN FREIGHT RATES

The Joint Economic Committee Jan. 6, 1965, issued a report (S Rept 1) criticizing discriminatory ocean freight rates. The Committee again recommended -- as it had in 1963 -- that the Federal Maritime Commission (FMC) take steps to eliminate international freight rates, established by international shipping conferences, which were higher for products outbound from the United States than for the same products inbound. The Committee investigation of ocean freight rates was begun in 1963 at the request of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.). (1964 Almanac p.1111)

Majority Views. The report said rate disparities forced U.S. exporters to pay more to ship commodities to Europe and Japan than European and Japanese exporters pay to ship comparable products to this country, even though the same ships were used both ways. The report added that the same disparities existed in U.S. trade with the growing markets of South America, Africa, and India, as opposed to European and Japanese trade with those markets. The disparities were attributed to the fact that U.S. lines are outnumbered in all but seven of the more than 100 active steamship conferences involved in U.S. foreign trade. "In substance," the report said, "foreign lines, some of which are government-owned, determine freight rates, sailing schedules, and other conditions vital to the expansion of American commerce."

The report said ocean freight costs in 1962 represented 12 percent of the value of U.S. exports and 10 percent of the value of U.S. imports. Emphasizing the effect of discriminatory freight rates upon the U.S. balance of payments deficit, which was $3.3 billion in 1963 (1963 Almanac p. 580), the Committee called for an international conference in which the major maritime nations could reach multilateral agreements for regulation of the steamship industry. But the report said that effective regulation by the FMC should not be delayed, pending such a conference.

The report criticized the FMC for not taking more vigorous action to abolish the disparities. It noted, however, that the FMC had "met with almost unbelievable opposition from maritime powers" in its attempt to secure information regarding the rate-making procedures of steamship conferences. It recommended that the FMC use its full statutory powers to order every shipping conference to justify its rates and said the Federal Maritime Administration should ban participation by American lines in conferences that refused to cooperate with the FMC.

The report also criticized U.S. cargo preference laws, under which at least 50 percent of all Government-sponsored shipments to foreign countries must be transported by U.S. Flag merchant vessels. It said such laws tended to increase freight rates because they reduced the eligible supply of ship space to the size of the American fleet, capable of accommodating a maximum of only 12 percent of U.S. foreign trade.

Separate Views. Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) recommended that additional consultation be taken with the American steamship industry and foreign governments before the "sweeping regulatory reforms" recommended by the Committee went into effect.

Boggs and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) stressed the importance of developing a U.S. merchant marine fleet efficient enough to win an increased share of U.S. foreign trade cargoes.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- July 16 -- The Senate confirmed President Johnson's July 1 nomination of FMC Chairman John Harllee for a new, five-year term ending June 30, 1970. At the swearing-in ceremony July 20, the President pledged his "strongest support" for FMC efforts "to eliminate all the barriers to U.S. trade now presented by discriminatory freight rates." Sen. Douglas July 23 praised both the appointment and the President's statement as indications that the FMC efforts would continue.

ESTES REVERSAL

The Supreme Court June 7, 1965, reversed (Estes v. Texas) a Texas state court's 1962 conviction of Texas promoter Billie Sol Estes on a charge of swindling. The Court held, 5-4, that telecasts of parts of Estes' trial had violated the "due process" clause of the 14th Amendment.

The reversal did not make Estes a free man, however. In a separate case, Estes had been convicted March 28, 1963, by a federal district court on four counts of mail fraud and conspiracy and, after the Supreme Court had declined to hear his appeal, was serving a 15-year prison sentence. Still pending in federal courts were indictments on 25 additional counts of mail fraud, interstate transportation of fraudulent securities and conspiracy.

The case decided by the Supreme Court June 7, 1965, involved a Nov. 7, 1962, finding by the Texas court that Estes was guilty of swindling T.J. Wilson, a Pecos farmer, on a deal involving a mortgage on a nonexistent fertilizer storage tank. (1962 Almanac p. 988; 1964 Almanac p. 998)

When proceedings began in 1962 against Estes, the small state courtroom was overflowing with people; 12 television and news cameramen were present; cables and wires crisscrossed the floor; three microphones were on the judge's bench and others were beamed at the jury box and the counsel table. The proceedings were carried live to television viewers and videotapes replaced the "Late Movie" at night. Some restrictions were placed on news media representatives during the actual three-day trial, but videotapes were made and the opening and closing arguments of the state, the return of the jury's verdict and its receipt by the trial judge were broadcast live on television.

Given these circumstances, the Court ruled in Estes v. Texas that the rights of the defendant to due process of law, guaranteed by the 14th Amendment, were denied. Four members of the Court found inherent unfairness in televising the trial because of its potential prejudicial effect upon the judge, the jury, defense and prosecution and the defendant. The fifth member of the majority, Justice Harlan, limited his views to opposing televising of notorious trials or those of widespread public interest.

Justices Stewart, Black, Brennan and White dissented on grounds that Estes had not proven actual prejudice in his trial, only potential prejudice. "The suggestion that there are limits upon the public's right to know what goes on in the courts causes me deep concern," Stewart wrote, adding: "I cannot now hold that the Constitution absolutely bars television cameras from every criminal courtroom, even if they have no impact upon the jury, no effect upon any witnesses, and no influence upon the conduct of the judge." Brennan noted that only four Justices held that televising of all trials was unconstitutional and that the Estes case therefore could not be taken as a blanket prohibition.

DOCTORS AND MEDICAL SALES

The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly in 1965 held hearings on physicians who sell eyeglasses and Aug. 6 released a report on doctors who own drug stores and drug repackaging companies. Subcommittee Chairman Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) introduced a bill (S 2568) to bar doctors from profiting from the sale of products which they prescribe.

BACKGROUND -- The hearings on the Kefauver-Harris Drug Amendments of 1962 first brought to the attention of Congress the question of a possible conflict of interest in physicians who owned companies which sold products they prescribed. (1962 Almanac p. 197)

The American Medical Assn. (AMA) said in 1954 that physician ownership of pharmacies was unethical. The AMA modified its position in 1955 to permit such a financial interest "as long as there is no exploitation of the patient."

In 1963 the AMA, restating this position, issued guidelines saying that a doctor "must not steer patients to his own pharmacy" or attempt in other ways to influence a patient's choice of a pharmacist. The AMA said it was "unethical for a physician to have a financial interest in a drug repackaging company." (Drug repackaging companies buy drugs under their generic or chemical names, relabel or repackage them and sell them under brand names at prices which often are higher than those charged for generic-name drugs.)

The Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee held hearings in 1964 on the question of physicians who owned pharmacies and drug repackaging companies. Witnesses from the AMA, the National Assn. of Retail Druggists and the American Pharmaceutical Assn. said they opposed physician ownership of pharmacies and drug repackaging firms. (1964 Almanac p. 1001)

Report on 1964 Hearings

The Subcommittee Aug. 6, 1965, in a report on its 1964 investigation, said about 140 physician-owned repackaging companies in more than 30 states had been identified by the Subcommittee. The report said the figure probably was much higher because "public records usually do not disclose physician-ownership unless doctors are officers or directors of a corporation."

The report detailed the operation of several drug repackaging firms it said were owned by doctors. The report said one witness testified that a Western repackaging firm sold prescription drugs under its own brand name at prices up to 13 times higher than were charged by the wholesaler who sold the drugs under their generic names. One drug wholesaler testified that his firm was being forced out of business because doctors were prescribing drugs from the company in which they had an interest.

The report quoted the promotion material of a Southern drug repackaging firm as telling its doctor-stockholders that if each had "written a scant two 'scripts' (prescriptions) per day -- sales would have been $118,000 -- with estimated profits between $35,000 and $40,000."

In addition, the report said, many doctors owned shares in pharmacies. Some doctors would phone prescriptions to their pharmacies by a direct line, while others would write them in a code that could be read only at the pharmacy in which they had an interest, the report said. It said other doctors would write the prescriptions on paper advertising their pharmacy.

Minority Views. Sens. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.) said they disagreed with Sen. Hart that federal legislation was needed to curb possible conflicts of interest in doctor-ownership. They said the problem should be solved by the states, professional organizations and existing federal antitrust legislation.

1965 Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Judiciary, Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee.

HELD HEARINGS -- July 27-29 and Aug. 5-6 on the subject of physicians who dispense eyeglasses.

TESTIMONY -- July 27 -- J.R. Johnson, an optician from Charlotte, N.C., said 18 of 19 ophthalmologists and eye doctors in Charlotte sold eyeglasses. He said his gross income declined by 27 percent between 1951 and 1964, "when the practice of dispensing doctors became too widespread." He also said doctors charged $150 to $200 for the same contact lenses which he sold for $125. One doctor charged an additional $5 fee for each adjustment visit, he said. Johnson said he charged nothing for adjustments.

Dr. Christopher Wood, an ophthalmologist from Myrtle, S.C., said he believed it was "always unethical" for a physician to profit from the sale of anything he prescribed. He said he found ophthalmologists in South Carolina were "competing unfairly" with trained, independent opticians and "were in a position to obtain high profits from the sale of glasses to their captive patients."

July 28 -- Drs. Charles W. Tillett and Marvin Lymberis of the Charlotte, N.C., Ophthalmological Society said in a joint statement that a survey in Charlotte showed the differences in prices were very small, "with the ophthalmologists' prices being consistently equal or lower than those of the opticians." Many patients prefer to receive eye examinations and optical service at the same place, they said. The doctors said ophthalmologists in Charlotte charged $160 to $175 for contact lenses, with no extra charges for adjustment.

Aug. 5 -- Dr. William O. LaMotte Jr. of the American Medical Assn. said it was the Association's position that "drugs, remedies or appliances may be dispensed by the physician provided it is in the best interest of the patient."

Aug. 6 -- Dr. Ralph W. Ryan, treasurer of the National Medical Foundation for Eye Care, a professional organization, said a physician had not only the right but the obligation to supply any drug or device if it were in the patient's best interests. He cited a survey by the Foundation in which 16 percent of the ophthalmologists who responded said there was no optical store in their city.

Bill Introduced. Sen. Hart Sept. 28 introduced a bill (S 2568) that would make it a misdemeanor for a doctor to make a profit from the sale of any product which he prescribed. Hart said the bill would "not prohibit them from profiting from the fee for professional services nor from supplying the products -- at no profit -- as a service to patients when other suppliers are not available." The bill carried a fine of $1,000 and/or one year in prison for violations.

1965 ELECTION RESULTS: OMENS FOR LIBERAL REPUBLICANS

The election of Republican-Liberal John V. Lindsay as Mayor in heavily Democratic New York City, combined with victories of liberally inclined Republican candidates in Philadelphia and Louisville, Nov. 2 signalled a potential Republican resurgence on the left of far-reaching importance for the Republican party and the U.S. two-party system. De-emphasizing their Republican ties, Lindsay and other liberal Republicans made a direct appeal for the aid of Negroes and other minority groups against entrenched Democratic city machines. The success of their effort, in contrast to the ultra-conservatism and implied anti-Negro stand of the 1964 GOP Presidential campaign, suggested that the same tactic might be tried widely by Republicans in coming years.

The Nov. 2 election returns, however, also emphasized the strong base of support the Democratic party generally enjoys in the U.S. today. In New Jersey, where the Republican gubernatorial campaign took a conservative tack similar to that of the 1964 campaign, the incumbent Democratic Governor was re-elected by a record plurality and Republicans lost control of the Legislature for the first time since 1913. Democrats also held the Virginia Governorship and Legislature and easily maintained control of the mayors' offices in major cities like New Haven, Pittsburgh and Detroit. In Cleveland, however, a Negro state legislator running as an independent came within 2,143 votes of upsetting the incumbent Democratic mayor.

In earlier elections, Mayor Samuel Yorty of Los Angeles, an independent Democrat with conservative leanings, was re-elected April 6 over seven opponents including U. S. Rep. James Roosevelt (D). In St. Louis, A. J. Cervantes (D) was elected April 7 to a four-year term as mayor. Mayor Erik Johnson (R) of Dallas was elected April 6 to a full term in a non-partisan contest.

In the smaller cities, some of the most interesting contests took place June 8 in Hattiesburg and Columbus, Miss., where the first Republicans in the 20th Century -- all staunch conservatives -- were elected mayors.

Kentucky

STATE LEGISLATURE -- Democrats, who were already in firm control of both houses of the Kentucky Legislature, added slightly to their majorities. Before the election, Democrats had controlled the House 63-37; and the Senate 25-13. The new party breakdowns: House 64-36; Senate 26-12.

MUNICIPALITIES -- Louisville -- Aldermanic President Kenneth A. Schmeid (R) defeated Marlin M. Volz (D), who resigned as Dean of the University of Louisville Law School to make the race. Schmeid succeeded Mayor William O. Cowger (R), who was ineligible for another term. Complete but unofficial returns:

Schmeid	61,639	54.5%
Volz	51,553	45.5

Cowger, the first Republican Mayor in 28 years, was elected in 1961 with the help of Louisville's large Negro vote. Cowger received nearly 60 percent of the Negro vote in 1961, contrasted with 1964 Republican Presidential nominee Barry Goldwater's five percent among Louisville Negroes in 1964. Republicans were concerned that Schmeid, a close political and personal friend of Cowger's, would not be able to win back the Negro vote, considered crucial to any Republican's chances of winning in the city. Cowger, as Mayor, had been responsible for the first public-accommodations ordinance of any city in the South and given jobs to all but four of Louisville's 14 Negro attorneys. Indications were that Schmeid gained about 50 percent of the Negro vote, a 45 percent gain over Goldwater's performance.

In the contest for Jefferson County Judge (a post similar to mayor), incumbent Marlow W. Cook (R), a moderate, overwhelmed his Democratic opponent, William B. Stansbury (D), by 54,199 votes (64.4 percent).

Michigan

MUNICIPALITIES -- Detroit -- Mayor Jerome P. Cavanagh (D), 37, easily defeated Detroit businessman Walter C. Shamie (R), 44, to win a second term as Mayor. Complete but unofficial returns: Cavanagh 295,409, Shamie 144,852.

Cavanagh is a prospective Democratic gubernatorial candidate against Gov. George W. Romney (R) in 1966. If Sen. Pat McNamara (D), 70, should retire, Cavanagh might also be a candidate to succeed him.

New Jersey

GOVERNOR -- Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D), 56, won a second term with a landslide victory over State Sen. Wayne Dumont Jr. (R), 51. Four minor party candidates received only token support. Complete, official returns:

Hughes	1,279,568	58.2%
Dumont	915,996	41.8
Hughes Plurality	363,572

The size of the Hughes' plurality was unexpected and observers regarded it as an adverse voter reaction to Dumont's chief campaign issue -- that Hughes should have sought the dismissal of Rutgers University professor Eugene D. Genovese because of Genovese's April 23 statement "welcoming" a Viet Cong victory in South Viet Nam. Throughout the campaign, Hughes defended Genovese's right to make such a statement as a constitutional guarantee and as a matter of academic freedom. Hughes said he disagreed strongly with Genovese's statement, however.

Moderate Republicans reportedly warned Dumont that the Genovese issue would backfire, but he failed to heed their advice. Right-wing GOP forces in the state, including the Young Republicans, strongly favored the emphasis on the Genovese issue. But U. S. Sen. Clifford P. Case (R N. J.), the only statewide Republican officeholder, and former Secretary of the Treasury C. Douglas Dillon, a member of the Rutgers Board of Governors, supported Hughes' position.

Returns indicated that Hughes had:

- Received over 80 percent of the Negro vote;
- Swept Bergen County, the most Republican county in the nation, in terms of registered Republicans, by 49,000 votes;
- Easily carried, as expected, the cities of Newark,

Jersey City, Trenton and Camden; and

● Run well in usually Republican suburban and rural counties.

Hughes' victory meant that Democrats would have control of the Governor's office, considered the strongest in the nation since the Governor appoints his own cabinet, for 16 years in succession. This would be the longest sustained control by either party in New Jersey in the 20th Century.

STATE LEGISLATURE -- On the strength of Hughes' 363,572-vote plurality, Democrats gained solid control of the New Jersey Legislature for the first time since 1914. Before the election, Republicans had controlled the Assembly 32-28 and the Senate 14-6 (one vacancy). Democrats will control the Assembly by 41-19 and the Senate 19-10. A temporary reapportionment, for use only in the 1965 election, added eight seats to the New Jersey Senate. Previously, each county, regardless of its population, was allowed only one Senate seat. Reapportionment helped the Democrats, since it gave additional seats to large urban counties where they are strongest.

Democratic control of the incoming Legislature was expected to bring enactment of some type of broad-based tax, either a sales or an income tax, or perhaps a combination (the state currently had neither). Hughes had said he favored an income tax but would accept a sales tax. Dumont had long been a champion of a state sales tax.

New York

REFERENDUM -- New York voters approved the holding of a constitutional convention in the spring of 1967 by 1,511,771 to 1,283,789 votes.

They also approved a $1 billion bond issue to combat water pollution.

COURT OF APPEALS -- Former U.S. Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y. 1959-65) was elected to a seat on the seven-judge New York Court of Appeals over Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Owen McGivern (D-L) and Henry S. Middendorf (Con.) by a 1,897,342-vote margin. The complete, unofficial vote was Keating, 3,692,485 (65.0 percent), McGivern 1,795,143 (31.6 percent), Middendorf, 197,149 (3.5 percent).

LEGISLATURE -- The Republicans' attempt to regain control of the State Senate was more successful than they had anticipated. Before the election, the Republicans had hoped to regain control of the Senate, lost in the 1964 elections, by a narrow margin. The election, however, gave them 37 seats to the Democrats' 28. The previous Senate breakdown was 33 Democrats to 24 Republicans.

The Democrats, as expected, retained control of the Assembly, 89 to 74, with two races in doubt. Their previous margin of control (from the 1964 elections) was 88 to 62.

The elections were held under a temporary, Republican-drawn "one man, one vote" reapportionment plan. The Legislature was under court order to formulate a permanent plan by Feb. 1, 1966.

MUNICIPALITIES -- New York City -- The Democrats' 20-year hold on the New York mayoralty was broken Nov. 2 when U.S. Rep. John V. Lindsay, running on the Republican, Liberal, and Independent Citizens tickets, defeated Democratic City Controller Abraham D. Beame by a margin of 136,144 votes. Other contenders were editor William F. Buckley, the Conservative candidate, and three minor party candidates.

The final unofficial breakdown was:

Borough	Lindsay (Rep.)	Lindsay (Lib.)*	Lindsay Total	Beame (Dem.)	Buckley (Con.)
Manhattan	210,498	79,622	290,120	193,582	38,048
Bronx	131,796	49,470	181,266	213,501	62,988
Brooklyn	240,031	77,714	317,745	360,734	97,115
Queens	257,507	82,858	340,365	239,428	120,549
Richmond	33,889	3,530	37,419	23,526	20,427
Totals	873,721	293,194	1,166,915	1,030,771	339,127
			46.0%	40.6%	13.4%

* Liberal total includes Independent Citizens vote not tallied separately.

Ethnic breakdowns showed that Lindsay cut into the traditionally Democratic Jewish, Catholic, Negro and Puerto Rican vote. Buckley aided the Lindsay victory by cutting into the traditionally Democratic Irish and Italian areas, although in other areas Buckley took votes from Lindsay.

Buckley had entered the race for Mayor with the goal of undermining Lindsay and thus ending what he regarded as undue liberal influence in the Republican Party. As the campaign progressed, however, it became more and more uncertain as to whether Buckley was taking more votes away from Lindsay or from Beame. In the last week of the campaign, both Lindsay and Beame attacked Buckley for his "Goldwater Republican" ties. Both Beame and Lindsay protested that Buckley was taking more votes away from himself than from his opponent. After the election, Beame stated that the major reason for his defeat was the normally Democratic voters who voted for Buckley. Other observers thought Lindsay and Beame had lost votes to Buckley in about equal measure.

Although the Conservative party had said that it would be happy to receive over 300,000 votes, the 339,127 votes which Buckley did receive was not significantly more than the 321,604 votes received by the similarly conservative Lawrence E. Gerosa of the Citizens party in 1961.

In trying to project a nonpartisan image, Lindsay almost always avoided mentioning that he was a Republican. In fact, his campaign literature stated that as a Congressman he had "supported the programs of Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson."

Beame was distressed by the failure of President Johnson to endorse him until Oct. 29, when White House Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers stated that Johnson "strongly and enthusiastically" backed Beame. The lateness of the endorsement was considered to have offset much of the benefits which Beame could have expected to derive from it.

Ohio

SPECIAL U.S. HOUSE ELECTION -- In the nation's only Congressional contest, Clarence J. Brown Jr. (R), 38, an Urbana newspaper publisher, easily won a special election in Ohio's 7th Congressional District (Central -- Springfield), defeating his Democratic opponent, Clark County Prosecutor James A. Berry, 35. Brown will complete a year of the unfinished term of his father, Rep. Clarence J. Brown (R 1939-65), who died Aug. 23. The junior Brown is also expected to seek re-election in 1966.

Complete unofficial returns:

Brown (R)	70,573	59.6%
Berry (D)	47,830	40.4%
Brown Plurality	22,743

MUNICIPALITIES -- Akron -- Summit County Prosecutor John S. Ballard (R), 43, ended 12 years of Democratic control of city hall, defeating Ray C. Sheppard (D), city law director, for Mayor, 53,720 to 33,068. Incumbent Mayor Edward O. Erickson (D) did not seek re-election. Republican National Committee Chairman Ray C. Bliss, a legal Akron resident and member of the Summit County Election Board, observed the city and national elections from his home town.

Cleveland -- In a race described by Clevelanders as the most hotly contested in 25 years, incumbent Mayor Ralph S. Locher (D), 50, won re-election by a razor-thin margin of 2,143 votes over State Rep. Carl B. Stokes (D), 38, a Negro, who ran as an independent. Two other contenders, Cuyahoga County Auditor Ralph J. Perk (R), 51, who originally had been considered the main roadblock to Locher's quest for a second term, and School Board Member Ralph McAllister (D), 37, who ran as a conservative, together polled fewer votes than either Locher or Stokes.

Pennsylvania

Philadelphia -- In a local race second in importance only to that of the New York City mayoralty contest, Arlen Specter, 35, a registered Democrat who ran under the Republican party banner, defeated incumbent James C. Crumlish Jr. (D), 45, a close political ally of Mayor James H. J. Tate (D), for Philadelphia District Attorney. The election of Specter, who had won the endorsement of U.S. Sen. Hugh Scott (R) and Gov. William W. Scranton (R), as well as of the reform-minded Americans for Democratic Action, represented the first Republican victory in the Democratic-controlled city in 12 years.

Complete unofficial returns:

Specter (R)	327,787	53.1%
Crumlish (D)	289,522	46.9
Specter Plurality	38,265

Major reasons advanced for Specter's surprising victory included: Crumlish's relatively lackluster campaigning, and his refusal to debate; Specter's "return to reform" campaign theme; Crumlish's failure to order an investigation of alleged corruption in the city's magistrate system, which was uncovered by Specter, formerly Crumlish's assistant in the Philadelphia District Attorney's office and later special assistant state attorney general; general voter dissatisfaction with the administration of Mayor Tate.

Texas

REFERENDUM -- Texas voters turned down a proposed constitutional amendment changing the term of the Governor from two to four years. The defeat was a setback for Gov. John B. Connally (D), who had strongly supported the amendment. Connally had said he would run for re-election regardless of whether the amendment won approval. Nearly complete returns: For 217,032; Against 264,375.

The state AFL-CIO, which had been feuding with Connally, vigorously opposed the amendment.

Virginia

GOVERNOR -- Lt. Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr. (D), 50, easily defeated Roanoke attorney A. Linwood Holton Jr. (R), 41, although Godwin's total constituted less than half the votes cast. William J. Story Jr., gubernatorial candidate of the Virginia Conservative party, cut into Godwin's vote by carrying 12 counties, all but one in conservatively oriented Southside Virginia where segregationist sentiment remains strongest. A fourth candidate, George Lincoln Rockwell, "Fuehrer" of the American Nazi party, received only token support. Returns from 1,922 of the state's 2,063 precincts:

Godwin	251,976	48.0%
Holton	195,861	37.3
Story	71,690	13.7
Rockwell	5,172	1.0
Godwin Plurality	56,115

Both Godwin and Holton campaigned as moderates, openly soliciting the votes of Negroes and the state's rapidly rising urban dwellers. Their moderation prompted the Virginia Conservative party to nominate Story, a segregationist and open member of the John Birch Society. Holton had rejected offers of Conservative support.

During the last weeks of the campaign, Godwin received a series of wide-ranging endorsements: the state AFL-CIO; two Negro voting groups with statewide influence; and Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D), leader of the state's conservatives and patriarch of a loosely knit political organization which has controlled the state since 1925. Further evidence of Godwin's acceptability to nearly all factions was indicated when he became the first gubernatorial candidate to gain the Democratic nomination without opposition in 50 years.

Godwin was a leader in the Byrd organization's "massive resistance" fight against the U.S. Supreme Court's 1954 school desegregation decision. But after his election as Lieutenant Governor in 1961, Godwin moved to a more moderate position on the racial issue, as well as others. In 1964 Godwin supported President Johnson, a factor which helped Johnson become the first Democratic Presidential candidate to carry the state since 1948. Byrd maintained his traditional "golden silence" on his choice for President. Godwin's support of Johnson and apparent conflict with Byrd's position moved him closer to the state's liberal Democrats as well as Negroes. This support infuriated the segregationist conservatives, however, and was one reason for the nomination of Story.

STATE LEGISLATURE -- Republicans made a net gain of three seats in the Virginia General Assembly. Before the election, Democrats had controlled the House of Delegates 89-11 and the Senate 37-3. Republicans added two seats in the House of Delegates and one seat in the Senate. The new party breakdown: House of Delegates 87-13; Senate 36-4. Both houses were reapportioned on a strict population basis Dec. 4, 1964, for use in the 1965 elections. Normally, only half the Senate would have been up for reelection in 1965, but under court order, all 40 seats were filled. Republicans had been expected to make greater gains, particularly in the fast-growing Washington suburbs, which picked up seats in the reapportionment. But Democrats won all but one State Senate seat in the area.

1964 Campaign Spending

RECORD $47.8 MILLION REPORTED SPENT IN 1964 ELECTIONS

NATIONALLY reported campaign expenditures rose to $47.8 million in 1964, an all-time record high and $14.9 million above the total of any previous election year in U.S. history. Included in this figure are $46.6 million in expenditures reported directly to the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate in Washington, plus another $1.2 million in campaign expenses which the Democratic National Committee reportedly had yet to pay for at the end of the calendar year 1964.*

In reality, however, the actual spending on all political races in 1964, including the primaries and intrastate campaign efforts which need not be reported under federal law, was probably in the neighborhood of $200 million. (For discussion of the reporting law and its deficiencies, see p. 1552.)

Official Report Breakdown

The official 1964 reports included $37.4 million spending figures from 41 Republican, 49 Democratic, 40 labor and 34 third party and minor political committees reporting nationally, plus $9.2 million in campaign expenses of Senate and House candidates. The over-all $47,762,890 figure was 45 percent greater than the previous record set in 1960, $32,896,322, and 107 percent over the 1952 figure of $23,896,366.

Following the pattern of most of the postwar years, Republican spending substantially exceeded that reported by Democrats nationally. But if predominantly Democratic labor expenditures, plus the substantial President's Club and Democratic ad receipts not reported nationally, were added, the differential might be much less or not be present at all.

GOP Spending Pattern

Ironically, the Republicans set an all-time record for spending in a Presidential campaign -- $19,314,796 -- while losing the Presidency by the greatest vote margin (15,952,085 votes) and one of the greatest percentage margins in U.S. history (Johnson 61.1 percent, Goldwater 38.5 percent). (1964 Almanac p. 1007) The previous high reported by a party for national-level expenditures in a Presidential election year had been the Republicans' outlay of $13,220,144 to re-elect President Eisenhower in 1956.

Though Republican spending rose sharply, it was not through increased dependence on large contributors. In fact, the 1964 Republican Presidential campaign represented a historic breakthrough in the decades-old effort to shift the burden of political campaigns from "fat cat" givers to a wide base of citizens. According to Citizens' Research Foundation figures, 72 percent of the dollar value of individual contributions to national-level Republican committees in 1964 was in totals of less than $500. The Republicans received an unprecedented 32.4 percent of their income from direct-mail appeals and another 13.7 percent from television appeals, according to the CRF calculations. There were 651,000 individual contributions of $100 or less to the GOP cause in 1964.

A major question at the end of 1964 was whether the sharp increase in small donations to the GOP was a phenomenon of the Goldwater race, engendered by intensive right-wing backing for his cause, or if the support would remain for other Republican candidates in the future. Certainly, the 1964 Republican fund-raising efforts specifically for the Goldwater candidacy were more successful than those for the Republican party in general. Between January and July 1964, the various campaign committees seeking to obtain the nomination for Goldwater received a reported $4,750,000, while the Republican National Finance Committee reported receiving only $3 million. Prior to the convention, the Republican National Committee's $10-a-membership sustaining fund, first instituted in 1962, had brought in $1,029,000. But when Goldwater took over the National Committee after the convention, 15 million pieces of sustaining fund literature were sent out at a cost of $1 million and 380,000 replies received with $5,800,000 enclosed. At the time of the convention, the Republican National Committee was $217,000 in debt; but at the end of the Goldwater campaign, the Republican coffers had a substantial cash surplus. (See section on the GOP Surplus.) Not unimportant in this development were the direct television appeals for Goldwater campaign funds by Ronald Reagan, Raymond Massey and National Chairman Dean Burch, which brought in over 200,000 contributions of $100 or less. Just within the last six days before the election, a total of $2,800,000

CITIZENS' RESEARCH FOUNDATION

The Citizens' Research Foundation of Princeton, N.J., Herbert Alexander, Director, gathered the official campaign contribution and expenditure figures included in this section. The figures are based on reports filed with the Clerk of the House and Secretary of the Senate in Washington, D.C.

* A major question still existed late in 1965 as to the actual deficit of the Democratic National Committee at the close of the 1964 election year. Several informal reports from sources close to the Democratic National Committee variously placed the figure at "just over a million dollars" to as high as $4 million. Congressional Quarterly chose to use $1.2 million, reflecting a level just over the million-dollar mark. The actual level of spending by the Democratic National Committee, however, was probably substantially higher than actually reported. While the official figures plus the reported deficit at $1.2 million total $13.3 million, the figure of $16 million in over-all spending was discussed by officials at the Democratic National Committee from time to time. The Democratic National Treasurer, Richard Maguire, refused to discuss committee spending or fund-raising activities with CQ or other members of the press. CQ wrote him asking for the exact 1964 deficit and over-all spending figures, but repeated inquiries elicited no reply.

Campaign Financing — 1952 through 1964

The table below shows reported national-level campaign spending included in reports to the Clerk of the House for the campaigns of 1952, 1956, 1960 and 1964. Known campaign debts (not actually reported) are added to reported expenditures to determine total spending figures. Numbers on the committee line indicate the number of groups reporting.

‡Democratic deficit figure based on informal, unconfirmed reports. Other versions have estimated it as high as $2.8 million, which would make Democratic total spending $14,948,791 (37.2 percent) and total national campaign costs $49,362,890.

poured into the Republican campaign chest in Washington. Final figures of the Goldwater campaign showed Southern states had easily oversubscribed their GOP contribution quotas, while the Northeastern and Midwestern states fell behind.

DEMOCRATS SHIFT TO BIG GIFTS

The Democrats, on the other hand, shifted to increased reliance on large contributors as they raised $11,062,957 and spent $13,348,791 (an all-time high for their party) in 1964. Of Democratic individual contributions, 69 percent were in sums of $500 or more. A comparison of the percentages of the total value in gifts in the $500-and-above category to national-level committees of each party since 1952 shows:

GIFTS $500 OR MORE

Democratic	63%	44%	59%	69%
Republican	68	74	58	28

(Source: Citizens' Research Foundation and Alexander Heard, Costs of Democracy)

Bearing out the same story, a study of individuals giving $10,000 or more to either party showed Democrats received $1,240,600 from these so-called "fat cat" givers in 1964 compared to $470,275 in 1960. The Republicans' total receipts from the 10,000-and-up givers declined to $869,364 from the 1960 level of $1,047,734. (See charts p. 1559, 1571)

One major source of Democratic receipts were the various $1,000-a-plate dinners of the President's Club throughout 1964. An estimated 4,000 persons attended these dinners in New York, California and other states, each paying $1,000. In some cases, however, the President's Club receipts were not reported in Washington, and thus do not appear on the Democrats' national-level spending reports. (In the case of California, they were not reported on the state-level either, thus violating either California or federal law or both, depending on utilization of the funds -- also never reported.) Despite reporters' requests, the Democratic National Committee never agreed to disclose the names of members of the President's Club (variously reported to have over 4,000 members) or to list the income received from President's Clubs dinners. In many cases, it appeared that funds from the President's Club dinners and other Democratic fund-raising activities were kept in the states and spent there for political activities of national import. They were not reported nationally and do not appear in the reports in this section.

The GOP Surplus

The Republicans' exceptionally successful 1964 fund-raising activities made it possible for national-level Republican committees to emerge from the elections with a substantial surplus. At the end of the calendar year 1964, with all but a few campaign debts paid, the Republican National Committee had a surplus of $314,000; Citizens for Goldwater-Miller $309,006; and the National TV Committee for Goldwater-Miller $506,534.

With the removal of Dean Burch as National Chairman, however, the new moderate leadership of the National Committee found it could not lay its hands on the combined $815,540 held by the Citizens and TV committees. The Citizens continued to hold most of their funds for use in the 1966 elections. In 1965, Citizens spent $8,000 to elect a right-wing candidate, Tom Van Sickle, to the presidency of the Young Republicans, gave $5,000 to Sickle's conservative predecessor, Donald "Buzz" Lukens, gave $5,000 to Sen. John G. Tower (R Texas) for his 1966 re-election campaign, and spent $5,000 for the election campaign of Rep. Albert W. Watson (S.C.), a conservative segregationist who switched from the Democratic to the Republican party early in 1965 after House Democrats stripped him of his seniority for backing Goldwater in 1964. The gift to Lukens took place about the time Lukens signed a fund-raising letter for the right-wing oriented United Republicans of America asking for campaign funds for conservatives in the 1966 elections and attacking the Republican National Committee under its new chairman, Ray C. Bliss, for its "liberal" makeup.

The likely final disposition of "Citizens" funds became apparent in December 1965 when Texas Republican Chairman Peter O'Donnell confirmed that leaders of the organization in a Dec. 12 meeting in Washington had voted unanimously to give the money to conservative incumbent Republican Congressmen seeking re-election in 1966. Goldwater was said to have agreed to the plan on the condition that the money be used for nominees for Congress, not in Republican primaries. The Citizens group asked the Republican Congressional Committee for a list of conservatives from which it could select beneficiaries, but instead was furnished with a list of all 49 Republicans who won by narrow margins in 1964, together with a compilation of their voting records by both conservative and liberal organizations. Among the likely recipients of the Citizens funds were the conservative, segregationist-oriented Southerners elected in 1964 by Goldwater supporters in the Deep South.

The National TV Committee for Goldwater-Miller, located in Los Angeles, Calif., spent between $100,000 and $200,000 in 1965 on the production of conservatively oriented television films which it sought unsuccessfully to persuade the Republican National Committee to sponsor.

Contributors of $500 or More

Included in this section are individuals who contributed $10,000 or more to political committees and candidates in 1964. (See p. 1559) Names of contributors of $500 or more appeared in the CQ Special Report, "1964 Political Campaign Contributions and Expenditures," which accompanied the Jan. 21, 1966, CQ Weekly Report.

For comparison with previous years' listings of $500 contributors, see the Special Reports on Campaign Contributions that accompanied the June 30, 1961, CQ Weekly Report (contributions in 1960), the July 26, 1963, Weekly Report (contributions in 1961 and 1962), and the July 3, 1964, Weekly Report (contributions in 1963).

Spending by and contributions to political committees and Congressional candidates are listed in the annual CQ Almanacs, beginning in 1958. For reports on a particular election, see the Almanac for the odd-numbered year following the election.

Loopholes in the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925

With the exception of some of the introductory material in this section, all the campaign receipts and expenditure figures are based on reports filed in accordance with the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 -- a law filled with loopholes.

First, the Corrupt Practices Act does not require reports of contributions or expenditures in either Presidential or Congressional primary campaigns, or in connection with campaigns for a party's Presidential nomination -- even though these efforts involve millions of dollars of expenses. (See below)

Secondly, though the law requires Senate and House candidates to report all spending made with their "knowledge or consent," most candidates interpret this to cover only their so-called "personal" campaign expenditures. Many candidates report they had absolutely no expenditures whatever, or spent just a few hundred dollars on their campaigns, only a fraction of what any observer knew their real campaign costs were.

Having reported no spending or just nominal sums as their personal spending, the great majority of candidates then take refuge in the legal fiction that the committees working in their behalf did so without their "knowledge or consent." And those committees, in turn, are not required to file because the Corrupt Practices Act specifically excludes political committees which work within a single state.

Thirdly, national-level political committees can hide their transfers of campaign money to candidates by simply reporting transfers of gross sums to state committees which are allied with the national group. The state committees, in turn, transfer the money to individual candidates, but the names of the recipients never appear on the nationally filed reports. This practice is traditional to labor union political funds and has more recently been adopted by groups like the American Medical Political Action Committee.

Fourth, political committees can hide the actual purposes of their reported expenditures by simply listing the purpose as "payment for professional services" or a similarly meaningless phrase.

Fifth, the actual identity of contributors can often be hidden by failing to give full names or giving addresses so incomplete that they make positive identification of the givers impossible.

Even with its loopholes, the Corrupt Practices Act is not enforced. The Act stipulates fines of up to $10,000 and/or two years in prison for willful noncompliance. Yet there has never been a single prosecution for failure to comply with the reporting requirements of the Corrupt Practices Act. The stated policy of the Justice Department, last spelled out by Attorney General Herbert Brownell in 1954 and confirmed by the Justice Department in a 1963 letter to Congressional Quarterly (which had inquired about failure to prosecute 54 U.S. House candidates who failed to file any reports whatever in 1962), is "not to institute investigations into possible violations of (the Act) in the absence of a request from the Clerk of the House of Representatives or Secretary of the Senate." Neither the Clerk nor the Secretary (both elected officials of their respective bodies) ever have referred any possible violations to the Justice Department.

Numerous "clean elections" bills to plug loopholes in the law were considered but rejected by Congress in the postwar years. In his 1966 State of the Union address, President Johnson urged comprehensive reform in the field "to prohibit the endless proliferation of committees, bringing local and state committees under the Act - to attach strong teeth and severe penalties to the requirement for full disclosure of contributions."

1965, said he hoped to recover the Goldwater funds for general party use. His efforts were not successful.

Campaigns for Nomination

No official reports of spending by candidates seeking a party's Presidential nomination are available, since federal law contains no requirement for reporting of primary or pre-convention costs. Based on interviews with responsible campaign officials and press reports, Citizens' Research Foundation* estimated that the Republican contenders for the nomination had spent over $10 million and Democrats $510,000 in efforts to win the 1964 Presidential nominations.

REPUBLICANS

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) -- $5.5 million. Between December 1962 and January 1964, the Draft Goldwater Committee received $751,000. Between January and the July nominating convention, the National Goldwater for President Committee (successor to the Draft Goldwater Committee) raised $2,750,000. Raised and spent separately were $2 million for the California Presidential primary. Convention expenses totalled about $191,000.

Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) -- $3.5 million to $5 million or more. Out-of-pocket expenses, connected with Presidential primaries but excluding costs of substantial staff in New York and Washington, public opinion polls, family airplane, etc.: New Hampshire, just under $100,000; other New England broadcasts for New Hampshire consumption, $100,000; West Virginia $80,000; Oregon $477,135; California, slightly more than $2 million. Also, New York office expenses connected with primaries, $100,000; Republican convention $70,000. Less than $100,000 of total Rockefeller expenses came from outside the Governor's immediate family, according to a report to CRF.

Gov. William W. Scranton (R Pa.) -- $827,000, spent almost exclusively between Scranton's June 12 announcement of candidacy and the July 13-16 Republican National Convention. Breakdown: TV-Radio $245,000; candidate travel $110,000; convention $200,000; printing $58,000; polls $12,000; fund-raising $10,500; hotels $27,000; miscellaneous $162,425; remaining bills $2,100.

Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge (R) -- Over $100,000. Major expenses included $32,000 for the New Hampshire primary and $54,300 for the Oregon Primary.

*In manuscript in preparation entitled "Financing the 1964 Election" by Herbert Alexander.

Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon -- More than $71,800. Reports indicated $15,285 spent in New Hampshire, $49,000 in Oregon and $7,500 in Nebraska.

Harold Stassen -- Over $70,000 -- $44,833 in New Hampshire, $10,000 in Indiana, $15,000 in vain attempt to get on California ballot, $30,000 for travel, convention expenses, etc.

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) -- Less than $2,000: $250 for travel to New Hampshire, $85 for travel to Illinois, $1,171 spent in her behalf by others in Oregon.

DEMOCRATS

President Lyndon B. Johnson -- As incumbent President, Mr. Johnson's nomination was assured and the regular publicity organs of the national Democratic Party were active on his behalf. "Standing in" for the President in primaries in their respective states, Gov. John Reynolds (D Wis.) spent $16,000, Gov. Matthew Welsh (D Ind.), $100,000; Sen. Daniel B. Brewster (D Md.), $70,000. And on June 14, two months in advance of the Democratic National Convention, the President's Club paid an estimated $350,000 for a 24-page magazine section on the Presidency and Mr. Johnson which appeared in 14 major newspapers.

Gov. George C. Wallace (D Ala.) -- $321,344, spent in primaries in Wisconsin, Indiana and Maryland and to elect an unpledged electoral slate in Alabama.

In addition, CRF estimated that "scores of thousands of dollars" were spent by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and others seeking the Vice Presidential nomination.

National Convention Costs

Political parties are not required to report their costs in staging national nominating conventions, but some figures were available for 1964:

Republican National Convention, San Francisco, July 13-16: Total cost $664,750, just over the 1960 figure of $642,800. San Francisco paid $650,000 -- $400,000 from local city hotel tax funds, $250,000 from proceeds of the Republican Convention Program. (For list of advertisers, see p. 1555.)

Democratic National Convention, Atlantic City, N.J., Aug. 24-27: Total cost reported to have been in the neighborhood of $2 million, compared to $749,070 for the 1960 convention (an increase of 267 percent). Democratic officials have declined to give a detailed accounting of 1964 convention expenses. Atlantic City and other New Jersey groups gave $625,000 cash to get the convention in the first instance. Another $1.5 million was raised through the sale of advertising for the convention program. (For list of advertisers and the use of surplus receipts over convention costs, estimated to be at least $1 million, see next page.)

Political Advertising Books

The Democrats' 1964 Convention Program, with rates set at $15,000 a page, introduced a new dimension to an old problem: the use of advertisements in political program books as a vehicle for corporations, otherwise barred from contributing to political parties, to make political expenditures which were tax-deductible because they were classified as advertising.

PROHIBITIONS IN FEDERAL LAW

Federal law makes it a crime for either corporations or labor unions to make contributions or expenditures "in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office." (Title 18, Sec. 610) It is also a crime for anyone contracting with the U.S. Government or one of its agencies to "directly or indirectly make any contribution of money or any other thing of value...to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use." (Title 18, Sec. 611) Still another section of the criminal code makes it illegal to "purchase or buy any goods, commodities, advertising or articles of any kind or description, the proceeds of which...directly or indirectly inures to the benefit of or for any candidate for an elective federal office...or the success of any national political party." (Title 18, Sec. 608)

Despite these prohibitions, the political parties for many years have published program books for their quadrennial national conventions with advertising by corporations. Up to 1964, the proceeds from these books were always carefully applied to the costs of the conventions -- not the ensuing campaigns.

IRS POLICY

The Internal Revenue Service's stated policy, as outlined by the Acting Commissioner in an Oct. 26, 1964, letter to Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.), was that "expenditures for the purchase of advertising space in the official program of a national political convention constitute ordinary and necessary business expenses, deductible from gross income under section 162(a) of the Internal Revenue Code, provided such expenditures are reasonable in amount and bear a direct relation to the advertiser's business. However, to the extent that amounts paid for such advertising (1) are not reasonable in amount, (2) do not bear a direct relation to the advertiser's business, or (3) exceed the advertising value of the space required, they will be considered as contributions to a political organization and are not allowable as deductions for income tax purposes." (Revenue Ruling 56-343, published in IRS Cumulative Bulletin 1956-2, page 115). In 1948, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue sought to disallow as a deductible expense the expenditure for an advertisement in that year's Democratic National Convention program. But the U.S. Tax Court ruled that the expenditure represented an ordinary and necessary business expense.

RATES AT $15,000 A PAGE

In 1964, the scope of convention programs shifted when the Democrats sold advertisements for $15,000 a page and netted an estimated $1.5 million on the operation. Democratic National Chairman John Bailey said that the profits were used to finance the convention and that the excess above convention costs would be used for "educational" rather than political purposes. But reporters' repeated questions failed to evince any accounting of the excess funds from the Democratic National Committee. The only "educational" expense which came to light was a reported $50,000 to the National Council for Civic Responsibility, a non-partisan group which sought to combat propaganda of right-wing groups. A major portion of the remaining surplus was reported to have been spent in registration drives in heavily Democratic (especially Negro) areas. Technically non-partisan committees, actually offshoots of local Democratic party groups, were established to handle the funds in each locality.

Advertisements for the Republican's 1964 National Convention book were set at $3,500 to $5,000 a full page. But when the Democratic experience became known, Republicans switched signals and late in 1964 put together their own slick 80-page magazine, "Congress -- The Heartbeat of Government." They sold $247,000 worth of advertising at $10,000 a page. Part of the funds were later applied to financing the activities of the House Republican Planning and Research Committee, headed by Dr. William B. Prendergast. The salaries of special staff men and consultants, as well as such projects as sending a Republican task force on NATO to Europe, were also funded out of the proceeds.

DEMOCRATS' 1965 BOOK

The continuing popularity of advertising books to raise political funds was demonstrated in December 1965 when the Democrats issued a 178-page publication, lavishly illustrated on slick paper, entitled "Toward an Age of Greatness." The book contained 68 pages of advertising at $15,000 a page, for a total revenue in the neighborhood of $1 million. The advertisers included 15 industrial concerns and airlines which had major defense contracts or whose business activities are regulated by the Federal Government. (For a full list of the advertisers, see p. 1557.) The production costs of the book were estimated at around $100,000, leaving $900,000 which was scheduled to be turned over to a series of "State Committees on Voter Education," in effect agencies of state Democratic parties for voter registration campaigns in Democratic areas. The 250,000 books were scheduled to be distributed free of charge at a series of fund-raising movie premiers throughout the country under Democratic sponsorship. Through $10-to $100-a-ticket sales, the premiers were expected to net funds for "voter education."

An answer to the problem of ad books and the practice of corporate tax deductions for ad costs was sought by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) in 1965. He offered two bills, one which would specifically make such advertisements deductible in full and the other which would disallow any deductions whatsoever for the same items. "I care not which bill is enacted, but I expect the Treasury Department to express a preference for one or the other of the bills, and I shall then press for enactment of that bill," Williams said. "The present rules are entirely too subjective to be applied dispassionately in an area as sensitive as politics."

1964 TV, Radio Political Spending

The Federal Communications Commission July 29 reported that a total of $34,610,714 had been paid for political broadcasts on U.S. television and radio stations in 1964. The totals were based on almost complete returns from questionnaires sent to the networks and 5,644 commercial broadcast stations (television and radio) in the United States.

Of the total, $10,006,725 was expended by candidates and committees in primary elections and $24,603,989 in general election campaigns. On an over-all basis, Democrats outspent Republicans, $17,841,125 to $15,916,905. (Minor parties spent $852,684.) But in the general election, Republicans outspent the Democrats, $13,032,575 to $11,012,626. The over-all Democratic total was higher because of major Democratic primary election expenses -- $6,828,499 as against $2,884,330 for the GOP.

1964 CAMPAIGN RECEIPTS AND SPENDING REPORTED BY 164 GROUPS

Following is a list, by key, of groups filing reports of their financial activities during 1964 with the Clerk of the U.S. House of Representatives. (The only exceptions are committees organized solely to aid one candidate for the Senate or House. See p. 1572,1582.)

The list includes key letters for each group, name of the group, location of the headquarters of each, dates covered by the reports (if the reports did not cover the entire calendar year 1964), and receipts and expenditures rounded off to the nearest dollar. Not that adjusted receipts are given for some groups. This figure represents a group's total receipts minus funds it received which were simply transfers from other nationally reporting groups, rather than direct contributions from individuals or state organizations. If no adjusted receipts are noted, there were no transfers for that particular group.

The political affiliation of each group is indicated by the letters in parentheses: (D) Democratic, total of 49 groups; (R) Republican, 41 groups; (L) Labor, 40 groups; and (M) Miscellaneous, 34 groups.

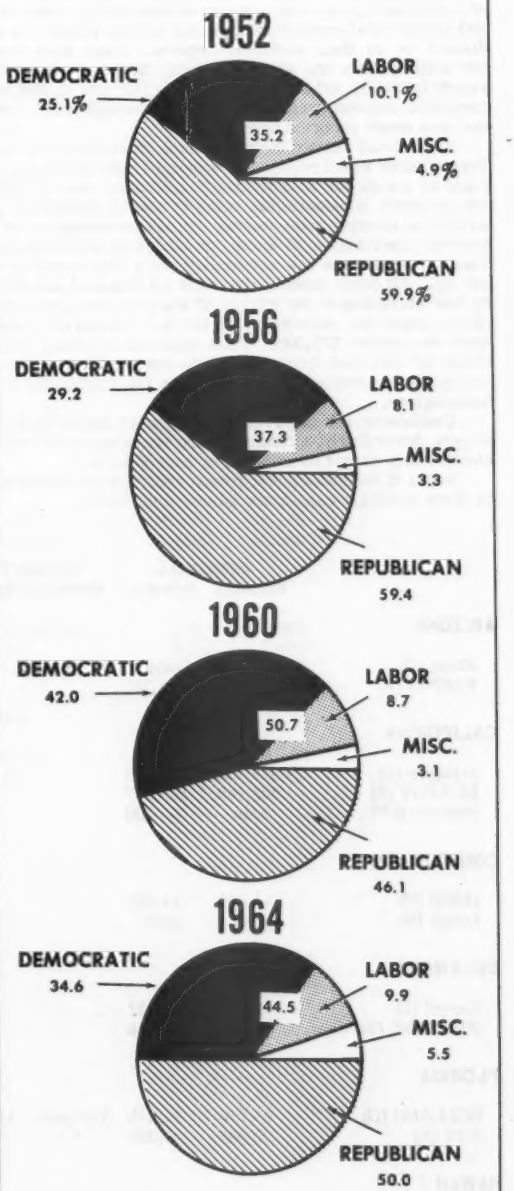
PARTY SHARES OF NATIONAL-LEVEL POLITICAL EXPENDITURES 1952-1964



Receipts, Spending Reported in 1964 by Senate Candidates

Each candidate for the U.S. Senate is required by law to file with the Secretary of the Senate both pre- and post-election reports of his personal campaign receipts and expenditures. Failure to file through negligence subjects a candidate to a $1,000 fine or imprisonment for one year or both, according to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. Willful failure to file is punishable by a $10,000 fine or two years' imprisonment or both.

Following is a state-by-state chart showing candidates' total personal receipts and expenditures plus reported figures for committees working in behalf of a single candidate. Committees working for candidates were not required to file with Congress unless they were working in more than one state or were a branch of a national group other than a political party. Most candidates had purely local committees working in their behalf and many indicated so in their personal reports. Since such committees operated in only one state, however, they were not required to report federally and only a few did so. The bulk of Congressional campaign expenditures are channeled through such committees and thus never reported nationally.

Candidates report their personal expenditures in two parts. Expenditures which need not be reported individually are: charges made by a state for an individual's candidacy, such as filing fees; any personal transportation costs or meals; stationery, postage, writing or printing costs (except for use in newspapers or on billboards); distribution of letters or circulars and telephone costs. These expenditures are not limited and a single sum is reported for all. All other expenditures must be itemized and are limited by law according to the number of voters in the candidate's state (three cents for each voter in the last Senatorial election) and must not exceed $25,000. Total personal spending in the chart below includes both itemized and non-itemized expenditures, since numerous loopholes in the law make the distinction relatively meaningless.

Candidates are not required to report primary election expenses. Accordingly, a candidate who was unopposed in the general election may report no receipts or expenditures.

A list of individuals and groups reported as contributing $500 or more to Senate candidates follows this chart.

Receipts, Spending Reported in 1964 by House Candidates

Each candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives is required by law to file with the Clerk of the House both pre- and post-election reports of his personal campaign receipts and expenditures. Failure to file through negligence subjects a candidate to a $1,000 fine or imprisonment for one year or both, according to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. Willful failure to file is punishable by a $10,000 fine or two years imprisonment or both.

Following is a district-by-district chart showing candidates' total personal receipts and expenditures plus reported figures for committees working in behalf of a single candidate. Committees working for candidates were not required to file reports with the Clerk of the House unless they were working in more than one state or were a branch of a national group other than a political party. Most candidates had purely local committees working in their behalf and many indicated so in their personal reports. Since such committees operated in only one state, however, they were not required to report federally and only a few did so. The bulk of Congressional campaign expenditures are channeled through such committees and thus never reported federally.

Candidates report their personal expenditure in two parts. Expenditures which need not be reported individually are those for any charge made by a state for an individual's candidacy, such as filing fees; any personal transportation costs or meals; stationery, postage, writing or printing costs (except for use in newspapers or on billboards); distribution of letters and circulars and telephone costs. These expenditures are not limited and a single sum is reported for all. All other expenditures must be itemized and are limited by law according to the number of voters in the candidate's district (three cents for each vote cast in the last House election in the candidate's district) and must not exceed $5,000. Total personal spending in the chart includes both itemized and non-itemized expenditures since numerous loopholes in the law make the distinction relatively meaningless.

In some instances, candidates reported elements of the same receipts and expenditures under both personal and committee reports. In most instances, it was impracticable to eliminate the duplications for the figures shown below. In addition, there were numerous errors in addition in candidates' reports. They also appear in the figures below.

Candidates are not required to report primary election expenses. Accordingly, many candidates who were unopposed in the general election list no receipts or expenditures.

A list of individuals and groups reported as contributing $500 or more to House candidates will be found on page 1590.
